We are still a young country, and many of our landmark civil rights decisions are fresh enough that the voices of their champions still echo, even as the world that preceded them becomes less and less familiar. We have yet to celebrate the centennial of the 19th Amendment, but a society that denied women the vote would seem to us now not unusual or old-fashioned but alien. I believe that in 2013 DOMA and opposition to marriage equality are vestiges of just such an unfamiliar society.

Americans have been at this sort of a crossroads often enough to recognize the right path. We understand that, while our laws may at times lag behind our best natures, in the end they catch up to our core values. One hundred fifty years ago, in the midst of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln concluded a message to Congress by posing the very question we face today: "It is not 'Can any of us imagine better?' but 'Can we all do better?'"

The answer is of course and always yes. In that spirit, I join with the Obama administration, the petitioner Edith Windsor , and the many other dedicated men and women who have engaged in this struggle for decades in urging the Supreme Court to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act.

Hope all well John! Saw in the news that you're doing some political travel - would love to raise some money at an event featuring you here in NYC next time you're up. Spoke to Alyssa M about it last month and DNC finance staff -- they all thought it was a good idea.

If you are open to it, I could put together a good group of people you would enjoy meeting.

Thanks and hope to see you soon.

One thought from plane. Perhaps the easiest -- and most visible -- place to aim for diverse leadership in senior roles is in the Comms/Press apparatus. There are a number of former Obama press/comms aides who have had roles on Campaigns, in government and even private sector now -- and so their experience rivals and maybe even exceeds whatever the people who played those roles in the '07/'08 cycle had (I'm thinking of people who were mostly in #2/deputy press secretary, traveling press, and Comms roles -- Pfeiffer, Burton, Psaki, Etc). Some names that come to mind:

--Nayera Huq (you may know from state)
-- Adora Andy Jenkins (formerly Holder's press sec, before that was at EPA. Now in private sector as Comms director at a tech association in dc).
--Kevin Lewis (current Holder press secretary. Worked for Pfeiffer forever)
--Marti Adams (I think she is Deblasio's press sec now)
--Dag Vega and Luis Miranda are both excellent and have both left WH. Not sure where they ended up but could track down.

Minyon may know a number of these folks. And there are probs others I'm not thinking about. But those spokespeople/Comms roles are definitely ones on the org chart that should be easy to fill with talented minorities.

Will keep thinking.

LCV & NRDC Action Fund Release New Poll of GOP Primary Voters in NH, SC

WASHINGTON, DC – As President Obama releases the final Clean Power Plan this afternoon and presidential candidates have begun to weigh in, the League of Conservation Voters and NRDC Action Fund released a new poll conducted by Republican polling firm American Viewpoint of Republican primary voters in the critical early primary states of New Hampshire and South Carolina showing how there may be a disconnect between many candidates and likely primary voters. See here for American Viewpoint's memo highlighting the results of the poll, and see here for a full breakdown of the poll results.

Overview of the Results:

1. The Republican primary electorate in both states is fairly conservative, yet they still show support for pro-environment policies.
2. Republican primary voters prefer more renewable energy, such as wind and solar, over traditional energy sources.
3. There are several clean energy policies that have broad appeal to Republican primary voters.
4. Majorities of Republican primary voters believe in climate change.
5. There is significant support among Republican primary voters for policies to address carbon pollution.

Subject: [big campaign] CORRECTION: BUSH AND MCCAIN OUT OF TOUCH: ON GAS PRICES, MCCAIN SAYS "I DON'T SEE HOW IT MATTERS"

BUSH AND MCCAIN OUT OF TOUCH with AMERICANS STRUGGLING WITH THE PRICE OF GAS

At his presidential news conference today, Bush was asked about his February statement that he had not heard about the cost of gas. He responded, "What is it now?" Neither McCain and Bush knows the price of gas, and McCain can't remember the last time he pumped his own gas -- and says "I don't see how it matters."

While Americans are getting squeezed at the pump, Bush and McCain don't know how much gas costs -- and they "don't see how it matters".

- When asked, Bush says "heard of it now" the price of gas -- watch it here: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=H_asyHfq_fA. A reported reminded Bush of his remark in February that he hadn't heard about the cost of gas -- then $4 a gallon. Bush replied, "Heard of it now."
 - McCain on knowing the price of gas: "I don't see how it matters" And as gas prices hit record highs , John McCain can't remember the last time he pumped his own gas -- or what it cost. When asked when the last time he pumped gas was and how much it cost, McCain replied"Oh, I don't remember....I don't recall and frankly, I don't see how it matters."
 - McCain said that Americans' economic problems and struggles with gas prices are "psychological."
- Gas prices have nearly tripled since Bush took office. The national average cost of gas today is \$4.11 a gallon , hovering near record highs. When Bush took office, gas was \$1.46 a gallon .

LCV Responds to Obama Speech at Cleveland Wind Turbine Factory

LCV President Gene Karpinski issued the following statement:

"As its citizens suffer from sub-zero temperatures and a chilling economy, President-elect Obama went to Ohio today to offer a warm ray of hope. His plan to double renewable energy production in just three years will create tens of thousands of good manufacturing jobs in Ohio.

"On the last business day before he takes the oath of office, President-elect Obama renewed his commitment to the first order of business of his Presidency — putting Americans back to work by investing in clean, renewable energy."

Hi John--

Couple not at all urgent things as I've been cleaning out the office and going through files over the last several weeks:

- Before I left yesterday, I had time to go through the last bit of files on the 2nd floor. FINALLY I found your "Transition" folder (so labeled, referring to the Obama Transition). I went through every page, but the personnel page was not in there--it was mostly policy related. No SF-50 in the file.

- As for those 2nd floor files, there is room in your 10th floor office to move 3 drawers of them them in, so that's what Admin intends to do (they need one cabinet back on the 2nd floor as part of their expansion). I worked with them yesterday on that so that it's done in an organized way while I'm out.

- Did Elizabeth Shogren ever send you the three copies of High Country that we asked for / did you receive them? I gave her your home address a while back but hadn't checked with you.

- For a fun walk down memory lane, I found your old syllabus and a few materials from your GULC "Welcome to the Darkside" class with Sarah Wartell! Let me know if you ever want to see that.

Subject: Question

John,

I am writing to follow-up on our conversation regarding Inaugural events. As discussed, I have booked a large number of Progressive major funders at both the Willard and the Sofitel (which are 2 blocks apart) and think it would be great to do a breakfast each morning for them and other major funders who are in town. The idea would be to make the 3 breakfasts a historic look at 3 Parts of the Presidency. We have a really great turnout with people like Ann Getty Earhardt, Vincent Mai, Jeanne Levy Church, etc.

We thought we would do one breakfast on the history of Presidential speechwriting and a look at the Inaugural Address. Michael Waldman could moderate and he could recruit additional former speech writers to participate in a panel with him.

We could do one on The Fourth Estate and how it has treated the American Presidency over the years. I thought maybe David could moderate and get journalists that have covered many Administrations.

I was hoping you might be interested in participating in a panel on the History of the American Presidency and A Look at How Obama Relates to Former Presidents. Other potential speakers could include, but that would totally be up to you.

John Alter
Doris Kearns Goodwin
Matt Pinsker
Richard Reeves
Michael Beschloss
David Gergen

These are all just ideas for each of these breakfasts and if you have other suggestions or and if you think there are topics or speakers that would interest these people more -- I am totally open to anything. I just want these people to really feel taken care of.

Please let me know what you think and if you would be able to participate. I think it will be fun and interesting for them -- and in no way related to fundraising for a change!

Thanks!

You are checked in to tomorrow's flight. Mobile boarding pass below. The campaign didn't get the early boarding so your position isn't quite as fancy, but based on my experience flying Southwest you should still be able to get an aisle seat. But it's a long flight, so let me know if you want me to call Southwest and upgrade your boarding position. It's only about $16 bucks.

Subject: Classroom Technology: Call for Echo 360 Class Capture Pilot Participants

Please note: This email is only applicable to faculty teaching in the following classrooms:

- McDonough 156, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, 207
- Hotung 1000, 2000, 6005

Dear Professor,

As a result of the collaboration between IST and the Faculty Technology Committee, 10 classrooms have been equipped with additional technology: Echo 360, a new video class capture system. Echo 360 captures and allows a student to view a lecture and presentation simultaneously (i.e., to watch both you and your PowerPoint slides, synchronized). Among educators, there is a growing practice to use class capture and make the videos available freely to students so that they can review and study for their exams. The 10 Echo 360-capable rooms are: McDonough 156, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, and 207; and Hotung 1000, 2000, and 6005.

We are writing to invite you to participate in a pilot to test the Echo 360 system. In the pilot, we are seeking to assess whether the technology enhances student learning outcomes. If you choose to participate in the Echo 360 pilot, IST will program all your class sessions to be captured, and your students will be able to view them without prior permission through the end of the regular exam period. If you choose not to participate in the Echo 360 pilot, your course and any audio-recordings will still fall under the Policy for Audio- or Video-Recording of classes. We hope you will consider participating in the pilot.

If you agree to participate in the pilot, please email Echo360@law.georgetown.edu by Monday morning, 1/12/15. For participating faculty, IST will provide a link to the Echo360 course portal for your class, which you can then provide to your students.

Gun Owners not Welcome on Obama's White House Team

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 13 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- The following was released today by the Illinois State Rifle Association (ISRA):

In yet another example of hostility towards lawful firearm owners, the Obama transition team is weeding out applicants for White House positions who own firearms themselves, or who come from firearm-owning families.

Evidence of the Obama team's distaste for firearm owners may be found as Question 59 of a 63 item questionnaire administered by Obama staffers to all potential applicants for positions in the Obama White House. The question asks for sensitive information about firearms owned by the applicant and his/her family.

"Question 59 provides clear insight into how Obama and his people perceive firearm owners," said ISRA Executive Director Richard Pearson. The questionnaire poses a number of questions asking the applicant to reveal any unethical activities, or embarrassing Internet chats, then wraps up by asking if anyone in the applicant's family owns a firearm. Obviously, Obama feels that owning a firearm is akin to talking dirty in Internet chat rooms. But that should come as no surprise as, while an Illinois State Senator, Obama voted for SB1195 - a provision of which called for gun owners to be registered in the same manner as sex offenders."

"Once again, we have to ask ourselves just what candidate Obama was talking about when he said he has 'respect' for the 2nd Amendment," commented Pearson. "If this latest assault on gun owners is considered a gesture of respect, then either Obama or myself is very confused."

A copy of the questionnaire may be found at <http://www.isra-pvf.com/obamaquestionnaire.pdf>

The ISRA is the state's leading advocate of safe, lawful and responsible firearms ownership. Founded in 1903, the ISRA has represented the interests of millions of law-abiding Illinois firearm owners.

Ok - the response from all - and I mean all - has been enthusiastic for reunion of Clinton WH Counsel's office circa the Quinn-Mills era plus or minus whatever.

So I am going to going a head and propose a date:

Saturday December 13 early evening somewhere in DC - or Sun Dec 14 brunch hour - or both. Less likely since close to Christmas but another option would be Sat Dec 20 or Sun Dec 21 brunch or both.

All: please vote.

The idea: the WH Counsels roast the deputies, the deputies roast back, and the rest of us roast everyone -- and Lanny Breuer - with the odd title of "Special Counsel (not that Lannythinks he is "special"), and with the odd first name that is not a nickname - as the MC.

Please respond if either of these weekends work and which one in order of preference.

Maybe even our former client can be found back in the USA this time of year to make it too, or could send a recorded message reminding us how much he loves lawyers!

Special note to Bruce Lindsey: please come! We need you for special roast material!

May ask all on this list to:

- 1) tell me "yes" you can make it on the 13th/14th or 20th/21st. I will circulate the consensus choice. And
- 2) send me names and email addresses of all you can think of who should be invited.

I will then let all know whether the 13th/14th or 20th/21st works for the most people.

Here's hoping we can pull this off.

Best to all,

Two things - I think the women will already have been introduced and so it seems odd for HRC to say let me introduce you. Maybe something like - I'm so happy to have my friends joining me today - you know how good it feels when you're with your best girlfriends? That's how I feel today.

Secondly - defer to the NH team but is there a NH example of a little girl she met instead of Iowa example (as much as I love that story!).

DATE: October 7, 2010

TO: Interested Parties

FROM: Americans United for Change

An unsettling new report is raising serious questions today about whether the powerful U.S. Chamber of Commerce is actively soliciting and spending untold sums of money from foreign countries to influence U.S. elections – money from countries including China, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia that may be being used to pollute the airwaves in Illinois as we speak on behalf of Congressman Mark Kirk.

From the Oct. 5 New York Times editorial, “Clean and Open American Elections” :

For at least 44 years, it has been illegal for foreign corporations, countries and individuals to make political contributions in the United States for any election, either directly or indirectly. It is even against the law to solicit such contributions. But in this Wild West year of political money, that longstanding ban is being set aside. The United States Chamber of Commerce — one of the biggest advertisers in midterm races around the country — is actively soliciting foreign money, and government enforcers seem to be doing nothing to stop it.

According to a report issued Tuesday by the Center for American Progress, a liberal policy group in Washington, the chamber is getting “dues” payments of tens of thousands of dollars from foreign companies in countries such as Bahrain, India and Egypt, and then mingling the money with its fund to advocate for or against candidates in the midterm races... The chamber has vowed to spend more than $75 million before the November election, and it has already run 8,000 ads, most of which support Republican candidates.

Illinois State Treasurer Alexi Giannoulias is one of the targets of the Chamber's $75 million likely foreign-funded television smear campaign. Public records indicate the Chamber has already pouring a half a million dollars into Illinois to attack him.

The question is: Does Congressman Kirk – who is “proud” to have the U.S. Chamber's endorsement – welcome these ads attacking Alexi Giannoulias on his behalf that aren't just from out-of-state, but could very well be from out-of-country? Will Kirk repudiate this wholly Un-American, Un-Democratic, and possibly illegal foreign intrusion into Illinois' political process?

For Congressman Kirk to look the other way and say nothing as more and more foreign money could pour into Illinois on his behalf would be tantamount to an endorsement of this affront to fair elections and our Democracy. His silence would send a clear message to the U.S. Chamber: "Keep it up, boys – keep it up."

Alexi Giannoulas is top target of the Corporate special interests because he is fighting to repeal corporate tax loopholes, embraced by the U.S. Chamber, that reward companies that ship American jobs overseas. Meanwhile, Congressman Mark Kirk never met a tax loophole for a job-outsourcing corporation that he didn't like.

A prime example: just last May, Kirk voted against the American Jobs and Closing Tax Loopholes Act -- legislation that would prevent corporations from using current U.S. foreign tax credit rules to subsidize their foreign activities and that would create up to 1 million jobs by restoring credit to small businesses, rebuilding American infrastructure, and providing tax relief for middle class American families.

For the U.S. Chamber, the choice was clear. They're willing to do whatever it takes to elect to the Senate someone like Mark Kirk who they can count on to protect Corporate America's bottom line and do whatever it takes to keep out someone like Alexi Giannoulas that puts middle-class Illinois families first...apparently, even if it takes money from Saudi Arabia to do it.

Hi All,

We've talked among the personal staff about HRC sending out a tweet to commemorate MLK Day, and the following is what we came up with. We wanted everyone to see it before it goes out in about 30 minutes.

"What would MLK say if he was alive today? Much progress has been made but we must march on against injustice & inequality. #MLKDay"

For context, here is what HRC tweeted last year:

"As a teenager I saw # MLK speak in Chicago & shook his hand. He urged us to stay engaged with the cause of justice. As vital as ever today."

Also I want to mention that a Daily Beast reporter from the hill beat emailed and asked the diversity question. I reminded him that anyone that's come on to help out doesn't replace those who have been close advisers for sometime, and I mentioned Cheryl and Maggie's names. I don't know that he'll write but FYI.

Hi everyone,

We wanted to share a tweet HRC sent out a little while ago and give some background on it.

In short, Barney Frank reached out to us yesterday and asked if she would engage on Dodd-Frank. He made the obvious arguments, that it would be good for her and good for him as he is spending a lot of time making the case for why the GOP chipping away at it is such a travesty. After thinking through the language with HRC, Jake, Dan, and Philippe, we tweeted the below.

Hillary Clinton (@HillaryClinton)
1/16/15, 1:57 PM
Attacking financial reform is risky and wrong. Better for Congress to focus on jobs and wages for middle class families.

A Field Guide to Who's Who in the Fledgling Clinton Campaign

Republicans are already clawing for spots in next year's presidential race, and so are the Democratic operatives who are meeting in Hillary Rodham Clinton's living room and her New York offices.

Mrs. Clinton, whose schedule has been unusually quiet of late, and her advisers are fielding résumés and talking to potential campaign aides (a mix of old and new). As the presumptive front-runner, Mrs. Clinton has her pick of talent. But several people with knowledge of the discussions say that some of the Democrats' most gifted political professionals have decided, for the moment, that the safest place to be is on the sidelines.

After all, in 2008, things didn't end so well for Mrs. Clinton's first campaign manager or her first chief strategist.

So here's an informal and wildly incomplete guide to the Clinton 2016 campaign as it slowly, quietly and cautiously begins to take shape (No, Mitt Romney has not called):

People to impress: Cheryl Mills, Huma Abedin and Evelyn S. Lieberman.

Doesn't tolerate drama: John Podesta.

Will run things: Robby Mook (and his mafia).

Dark horse: Stephanie Schriock of Emily's List.

Spin masters: Brian Fallon or Jennifer Palmieri (a Podesta pick)

Money man: Dennis Cheng.

Policy wonk: Jake Sullivan.

Message makers: Wendy Clark, the Coca-Cola marketing whiz, and Roy Spence, the advertising guru based in Austin, Tex. ("Don't Mess with Texas," or Hillary.)

The X-Factor: Chelsea.

	Maggie Haberman @maggiepolitico · 11m And assumptions about how the team will end up looking at the end of the day - including with longtime Clinton advisers - is a mistake Details
	Maggie Haberman @maggiepolitico · 12m But the visibility into emerging Clintonland is limited right now, and she's having lots of convos, not all of which will mean a job Details
	Maggie Haberman @maggiepolitico · 17m HRC insiders telling me they're expecting a slew of names to emerge - some right, but lot of others wrong, they won't address each one. Details

John,

Last night, Governor O'Malley had the best showing yet of the campaign.

Des Moines Register columnist Kathie Obradovich had this to say:

"...his best performance of all the nationally televised candidate events ... This format, a town hall with most of the questions from the audience at Drake University, played to his strengths as an engaging speaker with strong empathy for his audience..."

"His best moment of this forum was when he was asked what his supporters should do if the O'Malley campaign isn't viable in every caucus precinct. 'My message to O'Malley supporters across the state is this: Hold strong at your caucus,' he said."

"O'Malley's performance will persuade his supporters to do just that..."

Governor O'Malley needs you to #HoldStrong and chip in for a successful caucus night.

Katrina, John Hope Bryant sent a note to WJC suggesting that we do something to highlight the role that businesses played in advancing the civil rights movement. WJC sent a note saying we should evaluate this idea. I spoke with John today and explained we'd like to learn more, without committing that we'd do anything. One idea we discussed was to do a panel or something at CGI America in 2012 that would both look back at how businesses expanded opportunities for Americans of all ethnicities in the 1960's (and since), while also using that historic inspiration to have a conversation about what businesses can do today and into the future to expand opportunity for the most underserved in the US – whether african American or latino or any other race. John's folks mentioned they are in touch with you about CGI America, so just wanted to be sure you are aware. Feels like there is something very interesting here and a potentially good role for WJC to play on some tough issues – but I defer to you guys and welcome your thoughts.

John's other idea is to do a WJC-Andy Young-Tutu (and/or other panelists) discussion on this topic next year.

Also copying Marc since there are some good legacy components to this.

Sincerely,
Ami

Subject: No Exaggeration - This Is It

Dear John,

I had to write to you.

Over the next 48 hours, we're pulling out all the stops to pass a historic climate bill out of committee. We've been working at this for decades, and the vote is expected this week. But it's not over yet. Big Oil's cronies are doing everything they can to sabotage the bill.

As I write you, LCV organizers across the country are tirelessly working in the 18 swing districts that will make or break this vote for a clean energy future. But we're still $13,500 short of our $40,000 goal – and we have only a couple days left.

I wish I were exaggerating, but I'm not: our country's clean energy future hangs in the balance.

Help fight back against Big Oil's dirty tactics – please make an emergency donation of \$50 or more right now.

Al Gore has called this bill "one of the most important pieces of legislation ever introduced in Congress."

As LCV's Legislative Director, I want you to understand: never before have we invested this much time and money in a congressional committee vote.

If we fail to get a strong bill out of committee this week, we will have missed our chance on the most important climate vote in years. 10 of 18 lawmakers are on the fence. It all comes down to the next two days.

Big Oil and Dirty Coal lobbyists are working overtime. They're spending millions to convince those 18 lawmakers that we can't afford clean energy in this economic downturn – even though we know it's exactly what we need to save the economy – and the planet.

It's infuriating. But you can help fight their lies. We're armed with radio and TV ads, organizers, strategic coalitions, and phone banks in all 18 swing districts.

We need your support in these crucial final hours to keep ads like this on the air.

We still need \$13,500 to reach our \$40,000 goal by May 20. Donate today.

This is our best shot this year at curbing global warming pollution, creating millions of clean energy jobs, reducing energy costs, and enhancing U.S. energy independence.

We're doing everything we can to make sure the strongest bill possible gets passed, but we need you.

Thanks so much for everything you do for LCV and the environment,

Sincerely,

Tiernan Sittenfeld
Legislative Director
League of Conservation Voters

P.S. As Nobel Prize winning economist Paul Krugman recently said of this bill, "After all the years of denial, after all the years of inaction, we finally have a chance to do something major about climate change." Please make an urgent donation now.

the bill on the ropes.

Subject: Thank You Speaker Pelosi

Friend,

Nancy Pelosi has been one of the most effective Speakers in the history of Congress.

Guided by her leadership, Congress enacted the kind of progressive change we have been fighting for generations to achieve. She has weathered right-wing lies and smears with grace and a determined resolve. Join us and take a moment to say, "thank you."

Send a personal note to Speaker Pelosi about how much you appreciate her leadership. Make sure she knows that we still support her.

This has been one of the most productive Congresses in history. Under Pelosi's leadership Congress prevented a total economic collapse, created up to 3 million jobs through the stimulus, increased access to college through Pell Grants, cut taxes for small businesses and most Americans, passed historic Wall Street reform and ensured women get equal pay for equal work. And that's only a fraction of what Speaker Pelosi has led Congress to accomplish.

We haven't even gotten to health care reform. Speaker Pelosi's courage through the health care debate was the single most important factor in achieving comprehensive health care reform that will reduce the deficit, save lives, and expand access to preventative care. For this, all Americans owe her a debt of gratitude.

So before we begin dealing with the terrifying reality of a Speaker John Boehner, let us all take a moment to thank Nancy Pelosi.

Our new site www.ThankYouSpeakerPelosi.com will allow you to send her your own thank you note.

Take a moment to send a note to Speaker Pelosi letting her know collectively that we appreciate her efforts.

Thanks,

Jeremy

From: Americans United for Change

Subject: "9-12 Project" Must Be a Disappointment; Crowd Predictions from Rally Organizers and the Actual Turnout a World Apart

What a disappointment it must be for the organizers of the much hyped "9-12 Project" rally in the nation's capital today, which reportedly drew "tens of thousands" – a far cry from the "hundreds of thousands" to the "million" or even "2,000,000+" organizers had anticipated. "PERMITS ARE IN PLACE. This is the Official MILLION MAN MARCH ON DC!" , declared another organizer.

"The 9-12 Project" was the brainchild of conservative media personality Glenn Beck. The stated mission of the effort, according to the official website, was "to bring us all back to the place we were on September 12, 2001."

As the New York Daily News noted , it's a goal "you might find surprising" from Beck, who once professed: "You know it took me about a year to start hating the 9-11 victims' families? Took me about a year."

Much of the organizing legwork for this event was done on Beck's behalf by conservative outfit FreedomWorks, headed by former GOP Majority Leader Dick Armey, who told Newsmax TV less than a month ago that he had already received "hundreds of thousands" of RSVP's for today's rally:

The march, organized by Armey's political group FreedomWorks, is scheduled for Sept. 12 and is already generating hundreds of thousands of responses, the Texas Republican tells Newsmax.TV. The group isn't providing transportation, but that doesn't seem to be a problem.

Apparently when it became clear to FreedomWorks that they were going to come up more than a little short of their earlier crowd predictions, in a desperate effort to save face, FreedomWorks organizer Adam Brandon told The Politico on the eve of today's event that they now expected the "crowd to be in the 20-30,000 range."

Based on the anti-climactic turnout today for the anti-'all things Obama' rally and based on recent polling (Click HERE and HERE) showing strong momentum behind the President's health insurance reform proposal, it's clear the tea is not as strong as many had hoped.

Subject: A barrage of attacks in Ohio

LCV ACTION FUND

Donate to Sherrod Brown: Help Senator Sherrod Brown answer the attacks by Rove-backed corporate special interests groups.

John --

90 days – that's it.

Just 90 days are left until voters go to the polls right here in Ohio --and across the country, and early voting begins in just 56 days.

If we are ever going to have an opportunity to enact meaningful climate solutions or defeat the attacks on our clean air and water laws during the next six years, environmental voters must act now.

I believe strongly that we must take on the challenge of reducing our dependence on foreign oil, increasing investment in clean energy jobs, ending tax-payer subsidies for Big Oil, and finding a common sense path that curbs – once and for all – the ongoing threat of global warming.

But, corporate special interests – backed by Karl Rove and the Koch brothers – see things differently than you and I do. That's why they are flooding the airwaves in Ohio to try to elect my opponent, who is running on a radical, right wing, Tea Party platform. In fact, these groups have already spent more than $11 million on false ads and other tactics to try to defeat me in November. This amount is – by far – the most spent against any U.S. Senate candidate this election cycle.

They know that my 93 percent lifetime score on LCV's National Environmental Scorecard isn't a fluke. They know that if I'm reelected, I will continue to be a leader in protecting the air we breathe and the water we drink while creating clean energy jobs in Ohio and across the country. And that scares them.

Will you help me take them on and answer their attacks? Please make a gift today to my campaign via LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen. In the next 48 hours, we plan to raise \$12,000 from LCV supporters like you.

LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen program is devoted exclusively to pro-environment candidates for Congress. By "bundling" contributions from thousands of donors who care about our environment, LCV Action Fund provides candidates with financial support while signaling the power of the environmental movement. This allows your gift to have even more impact, because the more environmental voters contribute to campaigns like mine, the more power we have to take on attacks by polluters and corporate special interests.

And on a personal level, it also lets me know that the environmental community has my back in such a critical election year.

Everything we've achieved in recent years on issues like global warming, fuel efficiency, and clean energy jobs depends on winning in Ohio and across the nation. The balance of power in the U.S. Senate – and our ability to advance meaningful climate policies in the years ahead – could come down to whether or not we have enough resources available to win.

I hope you will chip in right now and make a gift to my campaign via LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen .

Remember, when you contribute to candidates through the LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen bundling program, you help increase our collective environmental strength in Congress.

Thank you for your support.

Hi Mara,

Thanks for getting back to me on Facebook and providing your e-mail; I do appreciate it.

This is a bit of a sensitive topic, so forgive me if my questions are general in nature as I'm only responding to a tip, but feel obligated to follow through.

I was recently contacted by a source who claims to have worked on the 2008 Hillary Clinton campaign and is alleging that Marlon Marshall made unwelcome sexual advances and propositions towards women on the campaign repeatedly. The allegation is that he would "corner women, make them uncomfortable and make suggestions about having sex."

The source encouraged me to contact women who worked under him in the Nevada office.

I was wondering if you were able to describe your experience with Marshall and if any of this rings true, with you or anyone else you know who worked there.

The source also claims that Robby Mook was made aware of the issue, but declined to act on it or intervene because he is personal friends with Marshall. Do you know if there is any truth to this?

Again, my apologies for the personal nature of the questions, but it is information that was recently provided to me.

If there's any light you can shed on this, whether there's truth to it, or if it's completely off base, I would appreciate that. I understand the sensitive nature of the allegations so am happy to protect your identity at this point, unless you feel otherwise compelled to speak out.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

David

The consensus among the respective communications teams is to say something simple and on the record, below:

"She looks forward to supporting the campaign, and will do so in the coming weeks."

And then tell the NYT on background that it will likely be in the form of help raise money since that's what is needed, which will just help keep expectations in line.

If anyone has thoughts/objections let us know as we need to get this to the NYT fairly soon.

Thanks.

Tony previously sent you the attached invite to a reception and fundraiser for our daughter Megan Rouse, who is running for School Board in Dublin, CA. Megan is serving on the Board, having been picked through a merit selection process to fill a vacancy. She is doing a great job and is sort of running for re-election, but this is her first time before the voters. Of course, we are super proud of her and the work she is doing. While you probably aren't too vested in the outcome of local California school board races, we hope you can support her candidacy, even at a modest level, as she begins her career as an elected official. Good to get in on the ground floor.

Hope to see you at Tony's--please let Heather Kliegman know if you plan to attend.

Subject: Re: Follow-up Media Call

I'm also fine waiting till tomorrow--Marissa will set up. For what it's worth (and I need to keep reminding myself of this), we predicted this cascade of stories...we are reaching out to prospective staff, many of whom make a living talking to the press, and this is the inevitable result. That said, we all need to be as careful as we can about what we share since it will inevitably get in the press.

Nick--great memo. This is exactly what we needed and I look forward to discussing. It will feel nice to start shaping this.

On Tue, Jan 13, 2015 at 8:32 PM, Philippe Reines <pir@hrcoffice.com> wrote:

Robby, I agree with you about the next discussion needing to be about specific implementation. Towards that end, Nick will reply all with the memo he drafted – which has languished with me, not him. I can do anytime tonight, but a 10pm call two years before Iowa seems a bit much — especially since there won't be anyone left to call us tomorrow, they all hit in one fell swoop this afternoon. So my suggestion is that everyone absorbs Nick's draft overnight, and Marissa Astor sets up a call tomorrow for tomorrow on the early side with the benefit of reading all these stories. Again though, I'm free at 10pm if the group thinks we shouldn't wait. Huma & Robby, entirely up to you.

Since I procrastinated though, I'll just add here what I was going to incorporate: Yes HRC learned from 2008, as she has learned from every experience of her life. But we shouldn't let people forget that 2007 was eight years ago. She has had many experiences since and they have been part of the learning/growing process. So the question of what she will do in 2016 isn't without a basis to answer as if she's been in a coma since she last ran. Look at what she did for President Obama in the general. Look at how she handled his wanting her to join the cabinet. Look at how she did the job of Secretary of State. Look at what she has done since, particularly on the philanthropic front. She has made hundreds of policy, management and personnel decisions over that span, and by and large they've turned out pretty well.

If you want to know what someone is going to do, a good place to start is what they've done. In 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, and 2014.

Also, to be clear, are we reacting to a proposed plan of action or just discussing? I would strongly prefer to react to something because we discussed strategy on our last call and at this point I would like to discuss implementation. There was agreement that we should shape likely leaks in the best light for HRC and supplement with bits of policy that show her focused on helping the MC. I'd like to just move forward in that strategy. Is there a draft of the memo we can see?

Afterwards, she said she thought it was excellent and that she wanted to do more. Mission accomplished! I think a suggestion moving forward would be to have a H4A backdrop for future google hang outs. That would add a nice visual to the presentation.

I'll send around notes to everyone regarding the Q&A. I also recorded the presentation as well, so we can pull a transcript. Overall the presentation was 40 minutes and included six Questions from the Executive Board.

1. Voter Suppression
2. Trade
3. Labor law reform
4. What will be President Clinton's role in the your campaign? (Everyone laughed about that one)
5. Income inequality and CEO pay
6. Social Security and pensions

People like you have been fighting to improve access to affordable health care since day one, because no one should ever have to go bankrupt because they get sick.

And even though Obamacare has been the law for more than three years, the other side is still trying to chip away at it. The House of Representatives has voted to repeal it 37 times, and conservative state legislatures across the country are passing laws that make it harder for their constituents to get access to affordable care.

So we're taking a stand.

Obamacare's not going anywhere. And neither are we.

HFA Organizing Event

Ottumwa, IA

OPEN PRESS

400 strong here in Ottumwa. They were pretty rowdy.

Over 1,600 Iowans heard WJC make the case for HRC today. (h/t Patrick).

Remarks were good. WJC was rapid firing. Stuck to his usual construct and was forceful about why he thinks she's the best change-maker he's ever met.

No Q's on the ropeline.

We're, theoretically, done for the day.

Color | New | Flags

Making the point that income inequality has been something he's both cared about and has credibility on, WJC said he's probably given more speeches about income inequality than anyone currently running for office.

Offered this fun fact: Turkey's can see better than humans.

Said we need answers over angers. Hope over fear. And action over rhetoric. Said HRC is the only one equipped to help us achieve all of that.

Made some contrast on health care.

Said he's tickled that she's tagged as part of the establishment. That her opponent calls Planned Parenthood the establishment. And then went on to use his language on HRC going to Wall St. to call them out.

Remarks

Started by effectively articulating what's at stake & why people are apprehensive about the future. Said we need to finish the recovery started under Obama and that we need to bring back the middle class.

Said we can do it because we've done it before. (pulled out his charts and gave Reagan the business).

Said we shouldn't turn our backs on important issues or turn Muslims into demons. That we should be doing this together.

Covered BLM, immigration, prescription and heroin drub abuse, dark money in politics, and voting rights.

Said that while it's important not to let the GOP not to rip away all the progress we've made, we need to work together - that we need more friends and fewer enemies.

He then moved on to the issue of guns, which he fleshed out a little bit. And then ISIS. And the frustration folks are feeling.

After he made the turn, he spent a significant chunk of time on all of the good things HRC has made happen - as a private citizen, as a Sen., and as SoS.

Covered health care.

And, the sanction on Iran. He praised HRC's effort profusely and suggested that both Obama and Kerry have acknowledged how important they've been.

And, Wall St. (Insert color).

Closed by saying we don't have time to start over and try and get things done. Said we need someone who want to continue to build on the success achieved. That we need a change-maker. That we need HRC.

I thought this was one of the most focused of all of the cases he's made on behalf of HRC. Will send the transcript when I have it.

Ropeline

Was asked by NBC how he feels going into the home stretch. He said he feels good. That folks are being receptive. That he's made the case he's wanted to make and that HRC has worked hard. That all that's left now is to leave it all on the floor.

Color | New | Flags

Said that he is indeed mad about all of the problems we're facing (i.e.: college affordability and kids being crippled by debt), but that ultimately what we need a change- maker. And that said change-maker is HRC.

Remarks

WJC was pretty fired up here in Washington, where WJC addressed 300 people, which I'm told is a pretty decent-sized crowd.

He started by arguing that we can't afford not to elect HRC, because she would lead with more friends and fewer enemies.

Talked about HRC's toughness, using the 11-hour Benghazi hearing as an example.

Forcefully pointed out that she's the only candidate to have gone to Wall St. to warn that if they didn't cut it out with home mortgage securities that they'd drive the economy into a ditch.

Pointed out the HRC's best friend from Chicago and dozens of people from AR are here knocking doors on her behalf, that it should tell you all you need to know. That she's isn't anything like the caricature that the GOP likes to paint.

He then dedicated a chunk of time speaking about all of HRC's accomplishments a private citizen, as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

He also created a bit of contracts on health care, but stuck to what he's been saying this whole time.

Said she would make good things happen on the good days (i.e.: when he reversed trickle down economics or signed peace in Ireland), on the bad days (i.e.: the day President Obama must've had after San Bernardino), and also on the other days.

He closed by talking about Flint.

Was asked by the student newspaper to articulate some of the foreign policy differences between HRC and Sanders. WJC didn't take the bait and instead opted to talk about all that HRC did around Iran and the sanctions.

Was also asked by a Norwegian reporter what it would take to win on Monday. WJC said "for folks to show up."

Color | New | Flag

Said we dont have shared prosperity and that the American Dream isn't exactly alive for everybody. That job #1 for the next POTUS will be to restore broad-based prosperity.

Said the GOP can't kill or occupy or bomb everyone to the stone age.

Brought his charts out again. Seemed to work better here, with WJC drawing a few laughs.

Covered health care a little bit, making the practical argument about not having 60 votes in the Senate. Said that he believes that the Republican Governors that haven't taken the Medicaid Expansion money will eventually do so, because it creates jobs. Didn't mention Sanders by name, FYI.

Said that the success of a President depends on what your positions are and what you know, but that it also depends on what you can do and whether or not you can work with others — that there's a difference between a change-talker and a change-maker.

Said that his sick of all this cynicism and all of the yelling, because it has nothing to do with people. That if folks are sick of it too, they should support a change-maker. And, that's HRC.

Remarks

WJC started by articulating what's at stake, and why we can't afford to let Republicans reverse everything that Pres. Obama has accomplished.

In framing what's at stake, he used climate change, voting rights, immigration, ISIS, and the economy under him (VS Reagan) as examples.

He then went on to talk about some of HRC's plans and positions, particularly health care and drug abuse. (Insert contrast language).

Had a little fun with the GOP, reminding folks about their 3D strategy. And, how they like to blame others for all of our problems, mainly Mexicans, Muslims, and President Obama and HRC.

He closed strongly saying we need a change-maker and not a change-talker (insert change-maker language), and dove into all of the things HRC has done as a private citizen, as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

He said trickle down economics is a failure and we can't go back. (He held up his graphs!).

Argued that we shouldn't resent success, but that we should rather move forward together.

Said it's slightly crazy that you only need to be 14 years old in IA to have a gun permit.

Said Liberal Republicans don't exist anymore.

Joked that he stared at HRC for several weeks before they actually met.

Started by framing the election and articulating what's at stake. He also talked about America's potential.

He then covered clean energy, gun safety, voting rights, inclusive politics, and the Benghazi Committee.

He transitioned and made all of the biographical points he's been making, forcefully arguing that HRC has been a change maker her whole life.

He closed by making his Flint argument & by making the same points he made last night re her faith.

We're on to the next.

QUESTION: Do you think we're covering her wrong?

BILL CLINTON: I'll tell you another example. Her best friends from childhood are coming down here, I think starting tomorrow from Chicago to canvass for her. She hasn't lived in Arkansas since [inaudible] January? 90 of them almost, 89 are going to New Hampshire, just getting four days going door to door.

At their own expense and a lot of them can't afford the trip. But they're doing it because they know her and they believe in her and they have got [inaudible] personal stories of how she made a difference and what kind of person she was.

And that's all that matters. The rest of the stuff--

QUESTION: Do you think the general public knows the real Hillary?

BILL CLINTON: What?

QUESTION: Do you think the general public knows the real Hillary?

BILL CLINTON: I think they're getting to know it, I think seeing their -- I think seeing the debates helped. I think seeing her go through that 11 hours helped. Remember what that guy in the CNN Town Hall meeting? He said, "I was a lukewarm supporter of yours." He said, "I saw that 11 hours. I am done [inaudible]. Nobody else in America could have done that."

QUESTION: Do you think that [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: I think it helped.

BILL CLINTON: But I think it all helps. I think the more people see her, [inaudible] they'll know what she cares about. But I think having her friends out there helps.

QUESTION: Do you think that Benghazi testimony was the strongest moment of her campaign?

BILL CLINTON: No, I think she's had a lot of strong moments.

QUESTION: Senator Sanders has gone after your wife for holding a fundraiser tonight. What's your response to that?

She spends enough time in Iowa?

BILL CLINTON: I think the far more important thing is before this economy cratered, she's the only person running for president in either party who went to Wall Street and said "You guys are dragging the economy in the ditch. You'd better change."

QUESTION: Do you think [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: Thank you. What?

QUESTION: Are you surprised Bernie Sanders isn't gung ho about a debate in New Hampshire?

BILL CLINTON: I don't know. I haven't thought about it. I think she said she'd do it if everybody showed up. I think debates are good for people, because they flesh out, you get to hear people talk about why they propose to do certain things.

And I personally think she's right about the healthcare thing, based on my experience. I have a -- nobody ever even got a healthcare bill for universal coverage out of committee from Harry Truman to me. But we got it out of two committees.

[Inaudible] situation. [Inaudible] when the Affordable Care Act passed. I was doing handstands of ecstasy [inaudible]. It's a lot easier to from 90 to 100 than from zero to 100 through 60 votes in the Senate and the House has voted 60 times to repeal it.

So I think the debates, though, they let you answer whatever questions people have, whatever they have. The public decides what they think is relevant.

QUESTION: [Inaudible] pie in the sky, that it just isn't possible. Is she angry enough to win in an election that we've seen where anger really has paid off?

BILL CLINTON: What?

QUESTION: Donald Trump is pretty angry. He's resonating with voters. Is she angry enough to win [inaudible]?

BILL CLINTON: It's important, if you're in this position, to have no feelings about that except you're trying to help people. She's angry that so many Americans have not participated in the recovery, have had their own potential and their [inaudible], their children [inaudible].

She's angry that we haven't done anything for these areas that have been left out and left behind, like Coal Country. She's angry that we haven't done enough to help people in this prescription drug and opiate epidemic. She just thinks about -- it's like when she called the Mayor in Flint: "What can I do to help?" That's what drives her.

What I said tonight is exactly who she's been for ever since the first day I met her. Do all the good you can. Her instinct is not who can I attack, who can I blame? It's not that you shouldn't ask people to take responsibility when they make mistakes, but her immediate instinct is what can I do to make it better. And that's what we need right now.

QUESTION: President Clinton, when you think about the general election map if Donald Trump blows this thing out and it's a Hillary Clinton match against Trump, what should voters be thinking about this week in terms of what Bernie Sanders' candidacy would look like up against Donald Trump versus your wife?

BILL CLINTON: I don't think like that. I think what voters should be thinking about this week is who is most likely to make my life, my children and grandchildren's lives and this country a place of shared prosperity, a force of security and peace and a place where we come together around solving our common social problems like [inaudible]. Who would be better?

QUESTION: But do you--

BILL CLINTON: The politics will take care of itself if people make the right decision about who's the most likely to have a positive impact.

QUESTION: And do you think the conventional wisdom will matter here for Donald Trump. I mean, if you've got Cruz who's got a better ground game, but Trump's got five million Twitter followers?

BILL CLINTON: I have no idea. I have no idea. It depends on whether it's an evidence-free or an evidence-matters election. It depends on whether people vote for someone who has a real chance to help them make their lives better. Those things are imponderable.

Anger can be a good thing, properly channeled. Apprehensiveness can be a good thing, properly channeled. It depends on how it shakes out. All we can do, all she can do is be who she is, who she's been all her life. I think it will be in the end what the American people want.

QUESTION: Do you think those people who are really angry -- do you see an opportunity for a crossover between a Clinton and a Trump voter?

BILL CLINTON: Well, I think first of all she's the very first person to say, "Hey I know they vote Republican. We ought to do something for Coal Country." We have not done a good job in America in dealing with the areas that get hurt from globalization or from the rise of climate change or anything else.

Coal employment in American peaked 95 years ago. It's not like we just learned about this. Thousands of jobs were lost when President Bush, ostensibly a pro-coal president was in office because he couldn't stop the rise of natural gas.

QUESTION: Yes.

BILL CLINTON: And so look, I think there's an opportunity for everybody to get votes everywhere if you run a people-centered campaign and you trust people to think. You've got to really trust people. You've got to say, "There's a lot of stuff you've got to let go."

There's a lot of stuff you've got to step away from. If you run a people-centered campaign that's future oriented, I think there's opportunity everywhere.

Took about 10 questions on the ropeline, most notably one about the NH "debate" and Sanders' decision to skip it. WJC said it's up to Sanders to decide what he'll do, but that HRC has said that if folks agreed to show up that she'd be there.

The rest were Q's about the economy, Trump channeling anger, and the state of the race here. WJC stuck to most of what he's been saying.

He didn't break anything, but I'll send a transcript around shortly nonetheless.

Color | New | Flags

WJC opened his speech by saying that HRC was in Adele earlier today. And that soon enough folks here will have the entire family in the state. He joked that Charlotte will be the difference-maker this election. That she can persuade him to do anything.

Recycled his 3Ds line & joked that you almost have to admire the GOP, because what's a fact here and there - that they live in a fact-free world.

Said we can't allow for the perfect to be the enemy of the good, that HRC will get the show on the road. That there's only one person who's a proven change maker on hostile territory and that's really important.

Reiterated that every single attempt to pass health care has always required 60 votes. That he and HRC were the first to do so. And that yeah they weren't successful, but that she ultimately got CHIP with Kennedy.

Said Newt told him that HRC was brilliant in the senate.

Said we have to deal with what we've got, i.e.: sixty Republicans in Congress.

Used his Flint bit, which got noticed.

References the Obama interview, saying he said that she's ready to be President.

Remarks

He started by covering a couple of issues, including climate change and immigration.

He then had a bit of fun with the GOP, saying that they're masters at labeling and blaming. (Insert 3Ds line).

Followed that up by making a lot of the biographical points he's been making on the trail. He talked about her time as a public citizen (insert health care line), as a Senator from NY, and as SoS.

Covered the economy: asked rhetorically: You don't mind if Warren Buffet makes money if he creates jobs, don't you?; and made the case why HRC will make the economy work for ever American again. He also said she's the only person running for President that went to Wall St. to speak against speculation.

Talked Flint. (Used his usual line).

Closed pretty strongly by saying she's the best change maker he's met. (Insert Obama line).

Can Congress' recent callous inability to help the poor people of Flint become an example of the kind of action that must happen? A call to send representatives to Washington who really are there to help people not posture themselves into more gridlock (see below).

Madame Secretary et al,

I had a good conversation with Simas today. Few things to report:

1. He said Debbie and Amy are supportive of bringing someone in to fill a general election planning/preparation role.
2. We agreed that Jen O'Malley Dillon would be a very strong candidate. She has the experience/relationships/gravitas to navigate the building. It's also completely credible for the WH to say that she's their pick. We agreed she should be our first choice for now unless we think of someone better.
3. He is meeting with Amy Dacey again on Wednesday and is going to report back. I will come back at that point with thoughts on what's most useful to raise at the meeting with Debbie. Ideally, Simas can tee Jen up by then and you can reinforce in the meeting how urgent it is that she be brought on board and empowered to get to work.

Spent an hour with Bruce yesterday. He's doing well; lots of therapy; he and Halle will head to Little Rock just before Thanksgiving.

We went over a number of items we discussed in our Monday meeting. Here are a few follow up items in no order of priority:

- 1) we discussed Bloomberg funding--I'll follow up with Patty Harris
- 2) he thinks he executed the Streisand grant agreement--I'll check in with Margie Tabankin
- 3) discussed Pritzker cgi america funding Valerie should follow up with JB and secure the commitment.
- 4) DLC--he thinks Tisdale is reviewing any filings including 990's that need to be made. Andy, will you follow up with John?
- 5) he's copasetic on Water St real estate.
- 6) thought he could participate in cgi post-Thanksgiving follow up meeting by phone.
- 7) decision about possible Addis trip in December needs to be made. He thought going could affect timing of contribution to some extent, but will not secure the $ this year. I think he generally supports going, but up to the President
- 8) He thinks he's signed off on salary bands/structures. Terry, do you need anything else?
- 9) Suggests holding on any doc review at the archives until he returns to Little Rock. Two exceptions--White House requests he can handle by email; if any other emergency request comes up, I can process. I'm holding a TS clearance. Scott, you may need to figure out what we need to do to add me to the review authority. Hopefully, this won't be an issue and can just slide till he gets back there.
- 10) Suggests I take his place on Haiti investment decisions. Laura,

Dear Hannah, attached for the President is a new report on China's energy future, by Climate Works (which was created in 2008 by the Hewlett Foundation, Packard Foundation, and McKnight Foundation). This may be particularly relevant in advance of his Q&A sessions in Hong Kong and Shanghai next week. It also probably is relevant for us, as we think about the future of CF in China (I've reached out to Climate Works folks to see if we can arrange a staff-level call or meeting). We'd welcome his feedback. Thanks, Ami

John -

You probably already know this, but 2016 is shaping up as a tremendous opportunity to elect not one, not two, but three progressive veterans to the United States Senate.

And as we have in cycles past, you can bet VoteVets is going to be on the front lines, fighting to elect each of them with some of the most powerful ads of the cycle. But we can't do it alone -- a good amount of our work is funded by supporters like you. So I have to ask:

Contribute \$3 to VoteVets today and help us lead the fight to elect Tammy Duckworth, Jason Kander, and Joe Sestak to the United States Senate.

The Koch Brothers are gearing up to elect candidates who will fight to privatize veterans' health care. Elevating the voices of veterans who will be harmed most by their insatiable greed is the best way to fight back. That's why your contribution matters.

Subject: Comments on encryption and anonymization

Hi Nick,

I'm working on a story today about the renewed debate over end to end encryption following the Paris attacks. One thing the article explores is Sec. Clinton's support for anonymizing tools such as Tor for political dissidents when she was secretary and whether that may be a political liability.

Can the campaign comment on whether that support may be a liability and/ or whether Sec. Clinton has a firmer position on government backdoors for encryption since the Re/Code interview in February where she called it a "classic hard choice?"

My deadline is 2 p.m.

Thanks,

Joe

John,

Did you see the president's message? We need to place our next TV buy tomorrow morning - we're close, but we need another $12,500 to make it happen.

I've known the president a long time, and he knows how to get to the point: If we don't respond to these attacks, we're going to lose.

This is one of those now or never situations. I wouldn't ask if it weren't important, but we've come too far to fall short. Can you help us stay up on TV? You can donate here or give Tim a call at (845) 831-9110 - I told him to stay near the phone.

Just 9 more days to finish strong. I can't thank you enough for being there for me.

Friend,

You know I believe in arithmetic. The numbers show Democrats are being outspent on the airwaves. And the more money we have to fight back, the better chances we have to win.

My friend Sean Patrick Maloney's district is being downright flooded with false attack ads from those GOP Super PACs. If Sean's going to win, we have to stand up and help him fight back.

Sean's campaign is making its final ad buy decisions right now. Will you help him finish strong?

Donate \$20 or whatever you can to Sean's campaign so he can beat back Karl Rove, the Koch Brothers and every other GOP Super PAC >>

No one ever said elections are easy. But our country deserves better leaders than these Tea Party Republicans in Congress. We simply can't afford a return to the same old, top-down policies that got us in trouble in the first place.

That's why we need to elect Sean to the House.

Please donate \$20 or more before Sean's final ad buy deadline >>

Now, let's win this thing!

Thanks,

Bill Clinton

Two things:

1. In the short term, we should come up with an alternative to pitch her.
2. Agree that long term, we have a big problem because our current strategy is unsustainable. Let's get a memo together explaining this. Then I think we present directly to WJC.

Bernie has a ton of grassroots support as we all know and see by his numbers. His participation in online fundraising and through contests can make a dramatic difference in helping us keep pace with him. Absent him we are def missing a huge opportunity.

Also - I have to say the last sentence from Tina is very alarming!!!!

- As you know our top ask continues to be and is the contest. Tina - do you think there is any period of time where this would be possible? Or any more we can do to consider this?
- In addition, we have several fundraising emails from now through the end of the year that we would like to send from WJC as his emails are doing tremendous. Fundraising asks would center particularly around upcoming debates & the very end-of-quarter in December. If OK, we will calendar out the asks for the next couple weeks and come back to you.
- I did make a note to remove the merchandise request from the memo.
- I left all the "creative ideas" as well and it sounded like there may be interest in a Facebook Q&A or having WJC take over our Instagram platform for a day with pictures. Working with you on any of these ideas would be incredible, and happy to discuss how to best organize any that you would like to try.

The last piece is you had asked for a way to track results that we could keep updated. I created this google doc and just have the birthday email in here from yesterday currently but we could use this to build out and keep updated.

I spoke with Molly and Matt Hollamby at Wyss today and they plan to meet with Heather and her team in the weeks ahead. I shared with Wyss some of the background items about the center, such as the goals document and staffing memo that had been shared with the steering committee.

And while talking to Heather to give her a head's up about Wyss, I learned that she testified before the Senate budget committee today about women and economic opportunity and will also be on the NewsHour tonight to talk about Piketty's book (debating someone from AEI, I believe). Heather said the senate budget staff was enthusiastic about the center's role and wants to find ways to collaborate.

Wall Street Journal op-ed: Bill Burton: "Isolationists vs. Interventionists: The Latest GOP Split"

By Bill Burton

September 18, 2014, 11:22 a.m. EDT

In attacking Hillary Clinton on foreign policy, Republican Sens. Rand Paul and Marco Rubio are doing a pretty good job of underscoring their own differences on isolation versus interventionism. In their estimation, one stance or the other accounts for the rise of Islamic State militants, and either way, Mrs. Clinton is to blame.

Huh?

Mr. Rubio wrote an op-ed recently attacking Mrs. Clinton for being an "isolationist" when it comes to foreign policy. He accuses her of paving the way for the rise of Islamic State by not arming the moderate Syrian opposition.

Mr. Rubio is completely wrong. Mrs. Clinton did in fact advocate for arming the moderate Syrian opposition in order to prevent extremists from taking control. But why take my word for it when his colleague is already pointing out that truth?

In an op-ed a few weeks ago, Mr. Paul said the exact opposite of Sen. Rubio, labeling Mrs. Clinton an "interventionist," and asserting that arming the moderate Syrian opposition would have "created a haven for the Islamic State."

You don't have to read that closely between the lines to see that their attacks weren't only aimed at their straw woman du jour but also at each other. Talk about an elephant in the room.

According to Mr. Rubio, "Members of my own Republican Party have also at times embraced the Democrats' narrative that too much American leadership is the problem, rather than the solution to global instability. Not too long ago, some neo-isolationists even claimed that America has no significant national interest in the conflicts in Syria and Iraq, and that American support for the Syrian opposition fueled the growth of the Islamic State." Hmm, I wonder who he's talking about?

Mr. Paul didn't hold back either in his criticism of the likes of Mr. Rubio: "But the same is true of hawkish members of my own party. Some said it would be 'catastrophic' if we failed to strike Syria. What they were advocating for then—striking down Assad's regime—would have made our current situation even worse, as it would have eliminated the only regional counterweight to the ISI[L] threat."

Regardless of whether the Isolationists or the Interventionists prevail in the GOP civil war, one thing is for sure: The Republican Party is divided more than ever. And, I will remain hopeful that somehow, someday, Republicans will get their act together, join in finding solutions and stop the nonsense and silliness that helps no one.

Dear Foundation Staff:

First, I want to thank all of you for the well wishes for my swift recovery. I am getting better and I am looking forward to being back in the office.

Until I am able to return to the office full-time, the President and I have asked John Podesta to serve as a special advisor to support me and the Foundation staff in our work. He has graciously agreed to be available by phone and email, as well as to be in the office periodically, to help provide leadership. Please seek his guidance and decision-making as necessary to ensure the work of the Foundation continues apace while I am out.

Once I am settled into a routine, I will update you on when I am available to address matters that might be more efficient for me to handle.

Again – thanks for all the good wishes.

Get this, John. Since we first announced that Speaker Boehner's buddies were going on TV with a $12,000,000 ad blitz attacking Democrats in the tightest races, we've been AMAZED at how many people have stepped up.

IN FACT, we're just 800 donations away from meeting our four-week-out budget deadline. If we meet this, we will be able to stand up and go toe-to-toe with Boehner and his ultra-wealthy GOP allies. If not, we could fall behind.

Subject: Endowed Chair Appointments

Dear Knox Community,

It gives me very great pleasure to announce that two of our colleagues have been appointed to endowed professorships in recognition of their very distinguished teaching, scholarship, and service to Knox College. I have made these appointments upon the recommendation of the Faculty Personnel Committee and the Dean of the College, and am grateful for their good counsel.

Dr. Diana Beck, Professor of the Educational Studies Department, has been named as the George Appleton Lawrence Distinguished Service Professor, succeeding Dr. Lance Factor, who will retain the title of George Appleton Lawrence Distinguished Service Professor Emeritus. Beck joined the Knox faculty in 1992, and specializes in adolescent development, the psychological foundations of education, and culturally appropriate teaching. In 1997, she received the Philip Green-Wright Lombard College Prize for Teaching and was named a Caterpillar China Project Fellow in 2007. For more than 12 years, she has served as Instructor and Director of the Navajo Nation Summer Science Camp, Atsa Biyaazh Community School, Shiprock, New Mexico, and has been supported in this by grants from the Ettinger Foundation and the Navajo Nation Rural Systemic Initiative.

Beck earned her Ph.D., M.Ed., and B.A. from the University of Illinois. Before coming to Knox, she taught for eight years as an elementary and secondary school teacher. Her publications and presentations focus on science and environmental education, multiple intelligences, gifted education, culturally appropriate teaching for Navajo children, and integrating content area reading and science education.

In addition to her teaching and scholarly work, Beck has an impressive service record at Knox, regionally, and nationally. At the College, she currently serves as Chair of the Educational Studies Department, and has served on the Executive Committee, the Faculty Affairs Subcommittee, the Institutional Planning Group, the Faculty Personnel Committee, and the Student Affairs Committee. Outside of Knox, Beck has served on the Governing Board of the Navajo Concordia Preparatory Academy and as a Faculty Representative to the Illinois Board of Higher Education, among other positions.

George Appleton Lawrence graduated from Knox in 1875. He married Ella Louise Park, Class of 1878, and together they became prominent residents of Galesburg, living in a wonderful stone house across the street from the College's Ingersoll House. Mr. Lawrence was a banker, financier, and agriculturist and served as a trustee of Knox College from 1891 to 1934. He was given an honorary degree in 1908. Mrs. Lawrence received an honorary degree in 1922 and established the first loan fund for women students at Knox. Together, the Lawrences remain in perpetuity members of the Walter Hobbs Society for their generosity to Knox.

Dr. Kevin Hastings, professor of Mathematics and chair of the department, has been named as the inaugural holder of the Rothwell C. Stephens Distinguished Service Chair in Mathematics. Hastings joined the Knox faculty in 1986, after completing his M.S. and Ph.D. in Mathematics from Northwestern University. He earned his B.A. degree, magna cum laude with honors in mathematics, from Knox College. In addition to presentations at numerous professional conferences and grants that have supported his research, he is the author of a number of publications in the subfields of mathematical statistics, numerical analysis, and financial mathematics,

During his time at Knox, Hastings has mentored many students in their research or Honors projects and connected students interested in mathematics and statistics with internships. Hastings also continues to provide estimable campus leadership through his service on multiple faculty committees and task forces, including the Academic Standing Committee, Curriculum Committee, Enrollment Planning Group, Honorary Degree Committee, and Knox 2018 Strategic Planning. Hastings has coordinated the Mathematics Placement System and taught in the First-Year Preceptorial Program. He also served on the College's Institutional Self-Study Steering Group in advance of Knox's most recent re-accreditation, and as Registrar for the College.

The Rothwell Stephens Distinguished Service Chair in Mathematics was established by H. James Farver '61 and his wife, Judith E. Farver '61. Twenty-eight other Knox alumni and friends of Rothwell Stephens provided support for the chair, joining with the Farvers in tribute to Stephens who taught mathematics at Knox from 1931 to 1975. Stephens served as secretary of the faculty for a decade, was registrar of the College for five years, and chaired the math department for 26 years.

In one of those resonances that can only happen at a place like Knox, Professor Hastings' career path has in many ways mirrored that of Rothwell Stephens. Not only have both served the College as professors of Mathematics and department chairs, but also as Registrar. In the spring of 1975, as a Knox junior, Hastings took MATH 322 Mathematical Statistics II from Professor Rothwell Stephens during the professor's final term at Knox. Now 40 years later, his student holds the chair named in his honor.

Please join me in congratulating Professors Beck and Hastings, and in thanking our donors for their generous support of the Knox College faculty.

Sincerely,
Teresa

Americans United for Change on House Passage of the Affordable Health Care Act for America :

“Standing Up to Big Insurance and Stepping Over the Party of NO, the Democratic Congress Clears Major Hurdle Towards Delivering the Health Insurance Reform the American People Voted For”

Washington D.C. – Americans United for Change cheered passage tonight in the U.S. House of the Affordable Health Care Act for America – sweeping health insurance reform legislation that will cover 96 percent of the American people, make coverage more affordable for all Americans, strengthen Medicare, and finally put an end to the indefensible health insurance industry practices of denying coverage based on “pre-existing conditions” and rescinding policies when Americans get sick and need it most.

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: “A year ago this week, President Obama and Congressional Democrats won an overwhelming election victory with the promise of a new direction in America, especially when it came to spiraling health care costs, the thousands of Americans each day joining the tens of millions without health insurance – and the thousands dying each year because of it. Tonight, the American people are closer than ever to realizing long-overdue health insurance reform thanks to the members of the House that stood up to the big health insurance industry and said ‘yes’ to guaranteeing all Americans access to quality and affordable health care. With the passage of the Affordable Health Care for America Act, we are a giant step closer to ensuring that “pre-existing conditions” becomes a phrase of the past and that health insurance companies finally face real competition with a public option, driving costs down and quality up for all.

“It’s amazing to think that many of our government’s most popular success stories like Medicare and Social Security were born out of the same political struggles that health care reform faces today. We need only look at history to know which side of history the members who voted ‘yes’ tonight will be on: the right one.”

“Meanwhile, the Republicans in the House are oddly patting themselves on the backs tonight for flatly rejecting the wishes of the clear majority of the American people as well as the AARP, the American Cancer Society . . . the American Medical Association and many others by standing shoulder-to-shoulder against reform. The Party of NO seem to think there’s political points to be scored by putting the profits of the big insurance companies ahead of the American families watching their premiums go up four times faster than wages. The Party of NO prefers the status quo where health insurance companies reward their CEO with tens of millions of dollars for doing unscrupulous things to maximize profits, like rescinding policies when people get seriously sick. The Party of NO chose to play games, offering a joke of an alternative bill that covers almost no one and lets insurers keep denying Americans with such “pre-existing conditions” as being a victim of domestic abuse or once having had a C-section. The only thing Republicans seem to be serious about is guaranteeing more big checks from the big health insurance industry by proposing no real reform at all.”

“While a major hurdle has been cleared tonight, the big insurance companies have no doubt saved their biggest guns for the Senate in their desperate campaign to kill reform. But we are confident that the Senate will too stand on the side of the vast majority of Americans – not big insurance. We are confident they will listen to the AARP and the American Medical Association — not a handful of obnoxious right-wing extremists.”

Subject: Book Discussion Wednesday March 2

Attachments: Soldiers on the Home Front.docx

Hi, everyone. I want to let you know about an event sponsored by our Center on National Security and the Law next Wednesday, March 2, at 12:45 pm in Hotung 5021. I will be interviewing and leading a discussion with Professor Bill Banks and Steve Dycus on their new book Soldiers on the Home Front: The Domestic Role of the American Military. I have attached a flyer for the event.

As the description of the book below indicates, this is an especially timely and important work:

“When crisis requires American troops to deploy on American soil, the country depends on a rich and evolving body of law to establish clear lines of authority, safeguard civil liberties, and protect its democratic institutions and traditions. Since the attacks of 9/11, the governing law has changed rapidly even as domestic threats—from terror attacks, extreme weather, and pandemics—mount. Soldiers on the Home Front is the first book to systematically analyze the domestic role of the military as it is shaped by law, surveying America’s history of judicial decisions, constitutional provisions, statutes, regulations, military orders, and martial law to ask what we must learn and do before the next crisis.

America’s military is uniquely able to save lives and restore order in situations that overwhelm civilian institutions. Yet the U.S. military has also been called in for more coercive duties at home: breaking strikes, quelling riots, and enforcing federal laws in the face of state resistance. It has spied on and overseen the imprisonment of American citizens during wars, Red scares, and other emergencies. And while the fears of the Republic’s founders that a strong army could undermine democracy have not been realized, history is replete with reasons for concern.

At a time when the military’s domestic footprint is expanding, Banks and Dycus offer a thorough analysis of the relevant law and history to challenge all the stakeholders—within and outside the military—to critically assess the past in order to establish best practices for the crises to come.”

We hope that you can join us for what should be a fascinating and important discussion.

Best,
Mitt

Congressman Keith Ellison, National Economic Council Deputy Director Diana Farrell and Advocates Press the Need for Consumer Financial Watchdog

The Consumer Financial Watchdog Will Benefit All Minnesotans on the Road to Recovery

Link to Audio of Call (Note the audio starts with Diana Farrell)

Attached: Treasury Department Outline for Financial Reforms, including the Consumer Financial Protection Agency, and the Attorneys General letter, signed by MN AG Lori Swanson, supporting the CFPA

Minneapolis, MN – Ahead of Congress' return to Washington next week, Rep. Keith Ellison and National Economic Council Deputy Director Diana Farrell joined Americans for Financial Reform to stress the urgency of creating a Consumer Financial Protection Agency to bring fairness and accountability to our financial system. This agency would serve as a watchdog for our wallets, protecting hard-working Minnesotans from the kinds of predatory practices that helped topple our economy.

Rep. Keith Ellison (MN-5): "After America's worst financial crisis since the Great Depression and negative savings rates among consumers over the last several years, there's no way that the status quo can be tolerated. We need change – real change. In fact we need a consumer financial products agency that will protect consumers from tricky financial documents and will allow consumer to make real choices based on clear disclosure.

"This is something that's going to help the general economy and everyone overall. Everyone knows that good markets work with good information. But that's exactly what we don't have. We need to make it more transparent and accessible to consumers."

National Economic Council Deputy Director Diana Farrell: "We have had a pretty uncompetitive situation between the banks, who have been subject to consumer protection fees, and this whole host of folks who currently are unregulated. The Consumer Financial Protection Agency would propose to in effect have some assessment against all people who provide credit to level the playing field for all of them."

Heather Booth, Director, Americans for Financial Reform: "We need a robust, independent federal Consumer Financial Protection Agency to protect consumers from unfair credit, payment and debt management products, no matter what company or bank sells them and no matter what agency may serve as the regulator for that company or bank. Properly implemented, the Consumer Financial Protection Agency will encourage innovation by financial firms, increase competition in the marketplace, and lead to better choices for consumers without threatening the collapse of our economy."

Americans for Financial Reform is a national coalition of nearly 200 state and local organizations ranging from financial experts to community working to restore fairness and stability to the financial system and rebuild our economy.

Perhaps the more apt metaphor for this week’s buzz isn’t a movie after all but double jeopardy. The case of Hillary, Bill and Monica has been prosecuted and then some. Thus all, especially Hillary, have been politically inoculated against further prosecution on this point. Besides, as some apparently need reminding, Hillary was the victim.

Let me know if/when I should share the op-Ed and infrastructure fact sheet we have been working up with Amanda and Nikki. The latter should be helpful in easing the blow for the trades.

The Building Trades are flagging for me that they hear the Obama Administration will deny KXL on Monday. I just wanted to try to politically get ahead of this and where we are on the issue if this in fact happens. The trades are also hearing that HRC will put out a statement stating that she encouraged Obama to take this position. Politically with the building trades, this would be a very dangerous posture. Just curious what your thoughts will be if the situation goes this way on Monday.

Appreciate it.

Or just blast the whole list with a note from you? Nikki handled invites for last week so I'd have to do a bit of digging to get everyone's email by tonight, but I don't think it's impossible.

We were counting on $25K by midnight tomorrow, but we're NOWHERE CLOSE. I really don't want to send people home, but if we don't hit this number, we won't be able to keep our GOTV workers going, and we will lose this race. What does this say about politics today?

ELIZABETH WARREN: You know this is the scary part about democracy today. It's... We're talking again about the impact of money. The credit industry on this bankruptcy bill has spent tens of millions of dollars lobbying, and as their profits grow, they just throw more into lobbying for how they can get laws that will make it easier and easier and easier to drain money out of the pockets of middle class families.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON
NEW HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE TOWN HALL
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29TH, 2015

Thank you, Matthew. And thank you, Dr. Gittel. It's great to be at White Mountain Community College, and it's great to be back in New Hampshire.

How many of you watched the Republican debate? Once again, the candidates hurled insults, demeaned women, and doubled down on trickle down—the failed economic policies of the past. It's starting to feel like a rerun of a bad reality TV show—one where all of the candidates are totally out of touch with actual reality.

But it's not enough to just complain about Republicans and billionaires. We have to actually make a difference in people's lives. I'm running for president to build an America where success is measured by how many people work their way into the middle class, not how many CEOs get bonuses.

Boosting incomes for working families is the defining economic challenge of our time. But Republicans want to stack the deck even more for those at the top, cutting taxes for corporations and the super-wealthy ... But they have nothing to say about equal pay for women, skyrocketing drug costs, or quality preschool for our kids. I've been fighting for families and underdogs my entire life and I'm not going to stop now.

One of the most important challenges is making college affordable and available to everyone.

Americans have more than a trillion dollars in student debt—and New Hampshire students have the highest debt of anyone in the country. My New College Compact will make sure that cost isn't a barrier, and debt doesn't hold anyone back. Here's how.

We'll make community college free at schools like White Mountain. I'll make sure that you can go to a public college or university without borrowing a cent for tuition. And for the 40 million Americans who already have student debt, you should be able to refinance to today's low rates.

Now, I'm a little different from those who say college should be totally free, even for the children of billionaires. You shouldn't have to pay for Donald Trump's kids to go to college. My plan would help those who need it most.

Everyone has to do their part. If we have students working hard and families contributing what they can, states and schools should have to step up, too. Higher education needs to deliver more for less.

I'm a progressive who likes to get things done. And I bet a lot of you are, too. So I'm asking you to be part of this campaign. Text JOIN to 4-7-2-4-6. Go to hillaryclinton.com. And talk to your friends, your classmates, your neighbors. Tell them how important this election is to our future.

We've got a lot of hard work ahead of us. And we're up against people who will say, do, and spend whatever it takes. But I'm going to keep doing what I've always done: Fighting for families. Fighting for fairness. Fighting for you. Thank you.

Subject: "Walking off the war"

John -

In 1965, Congress passed a bipartisan commitment to use offshore drilling revenues to support the conservation of another precious resource -- our land and water.

So every year, by law, royalties paid by energy companies drilling for oil and gas pay into a fund to protect and maintain national parks, forests and wild life refuges from development, and to provide matching grants for state and local parks and recreation projects.

But that law, The Land and Water Conservation Fund, expired on September 30th, and that puts many of our most treasured public lands in danger. And now we need Congress to renew the law ... in perpetuity.

Sign our petition calling on Congress to do that right thing: Renew the Land and Water Conservation Fund to assure it is fully funded. Every year.

For many of the men and women who return home from overseas, the road to recovery happens on the trails of some of our nation's national parks. We call it "walking off the war." And indeed, studies have found a link between outdoor activity and long-term psychological well-being among veterans.

That's why this legislation -- and your petition signature -- is important.

Thanks for signing,

Major General (Ret.) Paul Eaton

Subject: [big campaign] MoveOn releases new battleground polling, shows corporate corruption major issue for voters

Hey folks,

New polling today shows that this election for most voters is a referendum on the corporate corruption that has dominated Washington for years. This will be a major thrust of our election year campaign. More info here: www.fightwashingtoncorruption.com

The polling, done in twenty-two battleground House and Senate races, shows that:

- - > An overwhelming 79% of voters polled, including 72% of Republicans and 75% of Independents, believe that it's important that a candidate commit to reducing the influence of corporations over elections, with 56% overall saying it is very important.
- 89% of likely voters believe that it is important that a candidate commits to reducing the influence lobbyists have over the way laws are written, with 68% believing such a commitment is very important. Among Republicans, the numbers are 87% and 63%, respectively; among Independents, 89% and 68%.
- And 57% of voters, including 54% of Independents, agree that making the economy work for ordinary Americans requires taking on corporate lobbyists, with only 22% of voters (and 24% of Independents) disagreeing.
- Seventy-seven percent of voters overall (including 70% of Republicans and 73% of Independents), view corporate election spending as an attempt to bribe politicians rather than an expression of free speech that should not be limited.

You can see a summary memo of the polling here: <http://pol.moveon.org/fwc/battlegroundpolladvisory.pdf>

MoveOn Announces New Election Year Push: Fight Washington Corruption

Anti-Corporate Corruption Campaign Launches With More Than 158 Rallies Nationwide, A Pledge Signed By 29 Candidates, and New Battleground Polling

MoveOn.org Political Action, a group with more than 5 million members, launched a new election year push today to Fight Washington Corruption and to elect politicians who will fight for the Other 98% of Americans, not just the 2% who can afford to hire corporate lobbyists and buy elections. Recent battleground polling shows that 79% of likely voters think it is important that candidates for Congress commit to reducing the electoral influence of corporations.

The first part of MoveOn's multi-prong election effort launched today with more than 158 rallies in 41 states urging politicians to sign the "Fight Washington Corruption Pledge." So far, 29 candidates, including incumbents like Senator Barbara Mikulski (MD), and Alan Grayson (FL-8), and key battleground candidates like Jack Conway (KY), Lee Fisher (OH), Paul Hodes (NH), Andrew Romanoff (CO), Alexi Giannoulis (IL), Roxanne Conlin (IA), Manan Trivedi (PA-6) and Mac D'Allesandro (MA-9) have signed the pledge.

The pledge calls for candidates to publicly support specific solutions to eliminate the culture of corruption in Washington: overturning Citizens United, passing the Fair Elections Act, and reducing the influence of corporate lobbyists in Washington.

DC. All three of these solutions proved very popular in the battleground poll being released today.

You can see more information about the pledge here: <http://fightwashingtoncorruption.com/facts/>

You can see the politicians who have signed here: <http://fightwashingtoncorruption.com/candidates.html>

MoveOn also released new Survey USA polling today that shows these are winning issues for Democrats because they resonate with key swing voters and motivate the base.

You can see a summary memo of the polling here: <http://pol.moveon.org/fwc/battlegroundpolladvisory.pdf>

You can see the full polling results here: <http://www.voterrollcall.com/client/PollReport.aspx?g=ce694372-aa8e-48c2-83c1-e093151c0906>

The polling, done in twenty-two battleground House and Senate races, shows that:

89% of likely voters believe that it is important that a candidate commits to reducing the influence lobbyists have over the way laws are written, with 68% believing such a commitment is very important.

Among Republicans, the numbers are 87% and 63%, respectively; among Independents, 89% and 68%.

And 57% of voters, including 54% of Independents, agree that making the economy work for ordinary Americans requires taking on corporate lobbyists, with only 22% of voters (and 24% of Independents) disagreeing.

The pledge is part of a broader campaign, titled the Other 98%, that will work this fall to elect leaders who will fight for the majority of Americans and not just the top 2%. This will be MoveOn's major push this election cycle. Joining MoveOn in this campaign are partners SEIU, Democracy for America, Friends of the Earth, Common Cause, Color of Change, CREDO, Public Campaign, Progressive Campaign Change Committee, The Nation, True Majority, People for the America Way, and Public Citizen.

For more on the campaign, please visit: <http://fightwashingtoncorruption.com>

This is an issue that not only is taking off with voters, but with politicians too. Congressman John Lewis, in expressing support for the pledge, noted that from the long fight leading up to the Voting Rights Act of August 1965 to today, the cause of his career has been to promote equality of rights within the political process.

"Today we face another threat to our democracy, the unbridled influence of money, particularly corporate money, on our political process. I join you in your fight to break these ties."

To see John Lewis' full letter, please visit: <http://fightwashingtoncorruption.com/replewis.html>

"Our members worked for change in 2006 and 2008, and have realized that the primary obstacle to achieving the change we urgently need is the overwhelming influence that corporations have enjoyed in Washington for decades" said Justin Ruben, Executive Director of MoveOn.org. "Corporations are not people, corporate money is not free speech and democracy will only work for the Other 98% of Americans when everyone has an equal voice."

Subject: Faculty Workshop Information for Fall 2014

Dear Colleagues,

The two of us will be administering the faculty workshop this year, and we would like to solicit presenters. We will be continuing the practice of having one community-wide workshop over lunch on Tuesdays in the Hotung Dining Room, and two smaller workshops on Thursdays. As usual, we will distribute in advance the papers to be presented. We hope that attendees at the Thursday workshops read the paper with special care in anticipation of a smaller setting and informal discussion.

If you would like to present a paper, please so indicate by replying to this email. Please include in your reply the following information:

1. Your topic
2. Dates on which you could present. (The more dates you specify, the better the chance of our finding room for you)
3. Whether you have a preference as between the Tuesday large workshops and the Thursday small workshops.

Please reply by August 26 if at all possible. Early dates especially appreciated!

RE: Economic Development in the National Energy Council

Congratulations Carol on your new post. We cannot imagine anyone better suited to this essential task. We are so proud and excited. On behalf of all of our colleagues at American Progress, we wish you great success. We also thank you for your leadership on CAP's Board and your commitment to CAP during the institution's formative period. While we will miss you there, we look forward to working with you in your new role.

We write here to share an observation that might inform how you assemble the team that works with you. To be clear, we are not arguing for any particular candidates. We simply want to urge that you keep the skills and interests we suggest in mind as you build your team. We stand ready to work with whomever you select, but we believe our capacity to advance the shared agenda will be enhanced if we can interact with and you bring on board "economic development" staff with a focus on (and expertise in) the housing and community development, workforce, and infrastructure programs that will be needed to coordinate the retrofitting and reconstruction of our built environment, create green jobs, and move the foundations of our economy towards a low-carbon future.

We know you share our conviction that the task at hand is not simply environmental in nature, but involves a dramatic restructuring of the economy. You know well that buildings and housing represents 40 percent of our energy use and a comparable portion of global warming emissions. As a result, we need a national strategy to retrofit our existing building stock. With an aging workforce in the energy sector and proposals for a fivefold increase in building retrofits, we also need a strategy to address workforce development. And with a rising urgency to rebuild our transportation and electrical grid infrastructure to support low carbon energy, we need to confront global warming as both urban and infrastructure policy. Finally, we know you believe that the nation's green economic agenda can ensure that energy solutions lift all boats--especially those of the most marginalized communities--and invest in strong urban fabrics and quality jobs. A positive program of investing in clean energy can offer pathways out of poverty, skills training, and career ladders in high-paying trades and the industries of the future -- all desperately needed in our crippled economy.

We write because our prior and recent experiences suggest that it will require a single-minded and dedicated staff at the White House focused on this economic transformation to have a shot at success. As you may know, each of us served in both cabinet agency and White House staff roles in the past. We are keenly aware of how the challenges and day to day realities of agency offices make it difficult to wake up "thinking green." We are greatly excited about the talented cabinet that President-elect Obama has assembled and we expect similarly progressive and committed subcabinet picks. We know that virtually all of them share your interest in green transformation. But the enormity of the financial, policy, and management challenges and the great pressures of extant constituencies at the key agencies will make it difficult for them to pursue the energy transformation agenda with the intensity required.

Let us use HUD as one example. CAP recently hosted a meeting of advocates and experts on how to speed energy efficiency changes for the HUD-assisted and insured housing stock. The Secretary-designate is a friend, who is an expert in policy and shares our commitment to this goal. Yet we all were deeply chastened as we considered the agency's limitations, disfunction, and challenges. Even new dedicated political staff with energy transformation as their focus will find this daunting. They will need strong support and constant pressure from the White House to achieve the progress required.

Of course, you need some on your team seeped in the global climate change policy, emissions trading systems, and the science and technology of climate change, the environment, and energy. However, for this economic development transformation White House staff also must be expert. To be successful, you cannot merely coordinate agency efforts into a larger strategy or even demand policy responsiveness to the President's goals. Your team must initiate and drive policy development. While the President's commitment to this project is the most important ingredient, the job also requires Energy Council staff familiar with the capacities of the Departments of Housing and Urban Development, Energy, Labor, Transportation, Education, EPA and Interior - all of whom have relevant programs in their existing portfolios. Ideally too they know finance and have experience in shaping public/private partnership, as the government is leader and catalyst but the change must be society-wide. Such a staff would provide a point of entry and engagement for the mayors, community-based organizations, labor, civil rights groups, regulators, and other stakeholders involved with housing, urban, and infrastructure, and workforce issues, currently looking for ways to engage with the discussions around energy, climate and jobs.

Have no doubt that American Progress stands ready to engage, support, and work closely with each and every member of your team. We are very excited about the prospects for change and look forward to doing all that we can from outside government to provide ideas, analysis, and advocacy. Please do not hesitate to tell us how we can help.

This makes me think I shouldn't do any of these meetings.

For a statement, here's a first try at something to work with.

A number of delegations in Washington for the G-20 meeting this week requested opportunities to brief the transition team of President-Elect Obama. In response to these requests, senior officials of the transition team asked Secretary Madeleine Albright [and _____?] to meet with these delegations. The purpose of these discussions is to provide the President-Elect and his transition team with any information that the foreign delegations wish to convey with respect to the subject matter of the G20 meeting, in order to ensure effective planning for the activities of the Obama Administration in confronting the global dimensions of the financial crisis.

If people think we need to be more explicit about the limited purpose of these meetings, we could insert an additional sentence before the final one stating the one government-at-a-time principle.

Lippert and I want to be sure we're on the same page in re: staff mtgs and visiting foreign dignitaries around the G-20.

I noticed in an email that Anita sent earlier that Dan T is in charge of arranging staff mtgs around the G-20. If that is the case, we want to be sure we are not off the reservation.

In his protocol calls the last several days, the President-elect has demurred on mtg with visiting leaders (each has requested a meeting) and been equally non committal on meetings with staff.

We had been thinking we would propose that a team of senior, recognizable Democrats (led the Sec. Albright, but also including a finance/econ expert) would take meetings with visiting delegations. Such a posture with get us the benefit of the input from the visiting delegations (as Albright et al would debrief staff or even the President-elect on their meetings) but give us enough distance (since none of these folks like Albright would eventually be serving in an Obama Admin) that we would not own what they say.

Anita and Dan Tarullo, is this different from what you all are thinking/planning? If so, let's synchronize our watches before we get too far down the road.

Thx,
DM

Iowa Poll: Clinton leads, but Sanders draws near

Liberal revolutionary Bernie Sanders, riding an updraft of insurgent passion in Iowa, has closed to within 7 points of Hillary Clinton in the Democratic presidential race.

She's the first choice of 37 percent of likely Democratic caucusgoers; he's the pick for 30 percent, according to a new Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics

Iowa Poll.

But Clinton has lost a third of her supporters since May, a trajectory that if sustained puts her at risk of losing again in Iowa, the initial crucible in the presidential nominating contest.

This is the first time Clinton, the former secretary of state and longtime presumptive front-runner, has dropped below the 50 percent mark in four polls conducted by the Register and Bloomberg Politics this year.

Poll results include Vice President Joe Biden as a choice, although he has not yet decided whether to join the race. Biden captures 14 percent, five months from the first-in-the-nation vote Feb. 1. Even without Biden in the mix, Clinton falls below a majority, at 43 percent.

"This feels like 2008 all over again," said J. Ann Selzer, pollster for the Iowa Poll.

In that race, Clinton led John Edwards by 6 percentage points and Barack Obama by 7 points in an early October Iowa Poll. But Obama, buoyed by younger voters and first-time caucusgoers, surged ahead by late November.

In this cycle, Sanders is attracting more first-time caucusgoers than Clinton. He claims 43 percent of their vote compared to 31 percent for Clinton. He also leads by 23 percentage points with the under-45 crowd and by 21 points among independent voters.

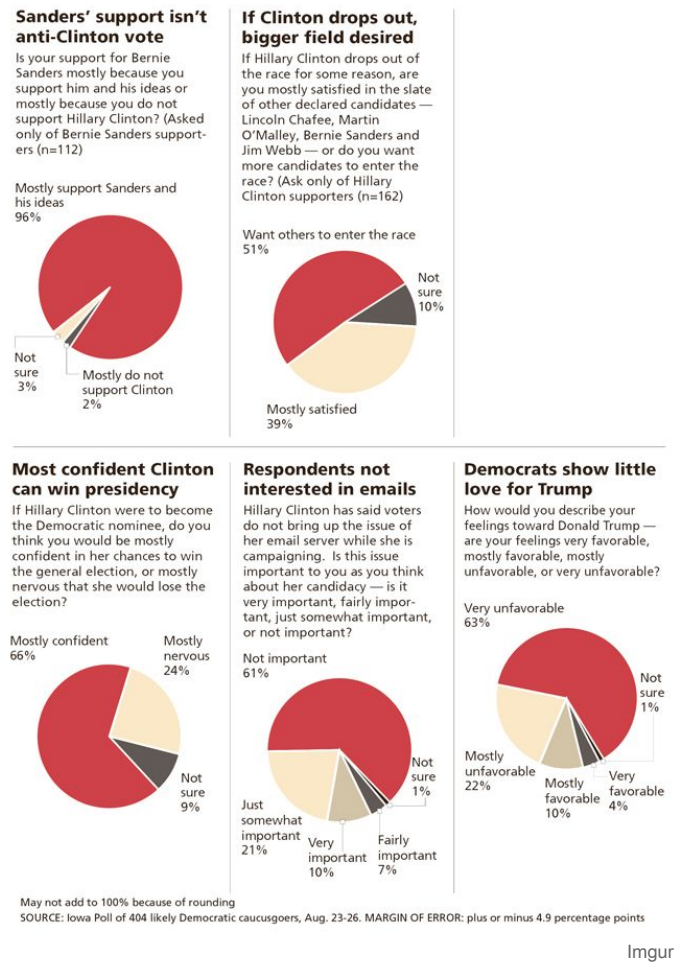

Sanders, a Vermont U.S. senator, has become a liberal Pied Piper in Iowa not as a vote against Clinton, but because caucusgoers genuinely like him, the poll shows. An overwhelming 96 percent of his backers say they support him and his ideas. Just 2 percent say they're motivated by opposition to Clinton.

Back in January, half of likely Democratic caucusgoers were unfamiliar with Sanders, who has been elected to Congress for 25 years as an independent. He has jumped from 5 percent support in January to 30 percent. Clinton, a famous public figure for decades, has dropped in that period from 56 percent to 37 percent.

"These numbers would suggest that she can be beaten," said Steve McMahon, a Virginia-based Democratic strategist who has worked on presidential campaigns dating to 1980.

"But," he added, "it's still early, and Hillary Clinton's done this before. She knows what it takes to win."

If Clinton survives the caucus and primary gauntlet to become the nominee, nearly two-thirds of likely Democratic caucusgoers say they're "mostly confident" she can win the general election. Twenty-four percent are mostly nervous, and 9 percent aren't sure.

Wild card: Will Biden decide to join race?

The open question is what Biden will see in these results. Will he see a teetering front-runner in distress? Or that Sanders has already consolidated a big share of the support available to a Clinton alternative?

In a May Iowa Poll, just before his eldest son, Beau, died of brain cancer at age 46, 8 percent of likely caucusgoers listed Biden as their first choice for president.

A Biden bid also would open a two-front war for Clinton. If he were to declare a candidacy, he'd almost certainly get a bump in his numbers.

The vice president saps support from both Clinton and Sanders, the poll shows. Without Biden in the mix, Clinton is at 43 percent and Sanders is at 35 percent.

"So, Biden takes 6 points from Clinton and 5 points from Sanders," Selzer said.

The Iowa Poll of 404 likely Democratic caucusgoers was conducted Aug. 23-26 by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines. The margin of error is plus or minus 4.9 percentage points.

DEMOCRATIC RACE TIGHTENS

Hillary Clinton continues to lead the Democratic presidential nomination race in Iowa, but Bernie Sanders has gained on her since the last Iowa Poll in May. The chart shows Vice President Joe Biden in the race and what would happen if he weren't an option and his first-choice support was reallocated. Respondents were asked: Which one of the following Democrats would be your first choice for president? And who would your second choice be? Then respondents were asked: I'm going to mention the Democrats who are not your first or second choice. For each, please tell me if you think you could ever support the person for president or would never support the person for president.

	1st choice	2nd choice	Combined first and second	1st choice, with Biden reallocated	If not 1st or 2nd, could you ever support?	If not 1st or 2nd, would you never support?	Not sure

Voters shrug about Clinton email controversy

What's driving Clinton's downward slide and Sanders' surge?

"Voters right now are flocking to the angry, authentic outsiders and moving away from the cautious or calculating establishment insiders," McMahon said.

Clinton has been dogged by media questions and an FBI investigation about whether her use of a private, home-based email server while secretary of state undermined U.S. security.

In Iowa on Wednesday, she said use of personal email "clearly wasn't the best choice." But Clinton, who says voters don't bring up the issue, downplays the investigation as "about politics."

Selzer said Clinton's right about the unimportance of the email controversy at this point in the caucus race — 76 percent of her supporters and 61 percent of all likely Democratic caucusgoers say it's not important to them. The emails are at least somewhat important to 28 percent of all likely caucusgoers, with an additional 10 percent saying the issue is very important.

"The stuff with the emails — that doesn't bother me," said poll respondent Craig Glassmeyer, 50, a screen printer from Cedar Rapids. "It's just being politicized, as well as Benghazi. How could it have been her fault, you know? They really don't want Hillary in there, and so they're fighting as hard as they can to block her nomination."

Still, Glassmeyer is one of the 14 percent who say they're not sure who their choice is yet or are uncommitted. He's trying to decide between Clinton and Sanders, "who may be too liberal for me," he said.

GOING IN DIFFERENT DIRECTIONS

Likely Democratic caucusgoers' support of Hillary Clinton as their top choice has dropped 20 percentage points from her peak in May. Bernie Sanders' support has climbed 25 percentage points since January.

Polls by the Des Moines Register and Bloomberg Politics

No traction for 3 lesser-known hopefuls

Meanwhile, three candidates are in danger of not meeting viability thresholds in the Democratic caucuses.

Martin O'Malley, who campaigns on the progressive results he achieved as Baltimore's mayor and Maryland's governor, has 3 percent support.

Jim Webb, a former U.S. senator from Virginia who stresses his military experience as a Marine and later a Pentagon official under President Ronald Reagan, is at 2 percent.

And Lincoln Chafee, an ex-Republican and former Rhode Island governor with an anti-war message, gets 1 percent.

The way the Democrats run their caucuses, voting isn't a silent, private-ballot experience. Instead, neighbors gather in batches across the state for a dynamic, public free-for-all, where the frontrunners' fans noisily recruit less popular candidates' backers to join their team. If a candidate can't muster a viability percentage, usually 15 percent, his or her backers must regroup with one of the viable candidates or remain uncommitted.

O'Malley's lackluster performance in the new poll perplexes Kedron Bardwell, a politics professor at Simpson College in Indianola.

"Having seen him speak with solid depth on issues, I'm surprised O'Malley isn't getting more traction in Iowa," Bardwell said. "Maybe his style is just too subdued for the bombastic and polarized pre-2016 American politics."

THEY LIKE YOU, OR DON'T KNOW YOU

More than 70 percent of likely Democratic caucusgoers have favorable feelings toward Joe Biden, Hillary Clinton and Bernie Sanders. Sixty percent or more don't know enough about the three other candidates to form an opinion about them. Respondents were asked: I'm going to mention some prominent Democrats, including candidates for the Democratic nomination for president. For each, please tell me if your feelings are very favorable, mostly favorable, mostly unfavorable, or very unfavorable. If you don't know enough about the person to answer, just say so.

	Favorable	Unfavorable	Not sure
Joe Biden	79	14	7
Hillary Clinton	77	19	4
Bernie Sanders	73	8	19
Martin O'Malley	33	7	60
Jim Webb	19	12	68
Lincoln Chafee	9	11	80

May not add to 100% because of rounding.

Sanders supporters really, really like him

But the love for Sanders runs deep, the poll shows.

Selzer noted that 39 percent of likely caucusgoers say their feelings about Sanders arevery favorable, with another 34 percent saying mostly favorable. Only 8 percent have a negative view of Sanders.

Contrast that with Clinton: Fewer feel very favorable about her (27 percent), and twice as many view her negatively (19 percent).

Still, she's doing better than in fall 2007, when she was viewed negatively by 30 percent of likely Democratic caucusgoers.

Poll respondents say they're wild about Sanders because of his authenticity, refusal to run a negative campaign and his big ideas, which include government-paid college tuition and health care for all.

"He doesn't sugarcoat anything, and he has answers to actual questions. He doesn't just use talking points," said Deb Bolfik, a 41-year-old grocery store worker from Des Moines who intends to support Sanders in the caucuses.

Austin Haywood, a 27-year-old appraiser who lives in Adel, said he supports Sanders because the senator holds rivals accountable for decisions they made in the past but doesn't attack them. "I think that's what people in America really want to see," Haywood said. "As fun as it is to watch 'Real Housewives: Political Edition,' people really want to see the truth, and they really want to see what's actually going on. They don't want to see this sideshow that's become our political process."

Asked about Clinton, Haywood said: "I think she's fine. Personally I don't like her as my candidate, not necessarily for the reasons that the media is currently portraying. I think she's getting a terrible rap right now."

Haywood, who works in the financial industry, said he's seen the negative effects of repeal of the Glass-Steagall Act, which barred commercial banks from engaging in investment banking. He believes Clinton doesn't take strong enough stances on breaking up big banks or opposing the Citizens United court ruling, which opened the floodgates to unlimited amounts of money in campaign politics.

Sanders does, Haywood said.

Democrats on Trump

Likely Democratic caucusgoers take a dim view of businessman Donald Trump, whose unorthodox campaign has roiled the Republican field.

- 85 percent view him unfavorably, including 63 percent who say their views are very unfavorable.
- 14 percent view him favorably.
- 1 percent aren't sure.

About the poll

The Iowa Poll, conducted Aug. 23-26 for The Des Moines Register and Bloomberg Politics by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines, is based on telephone interviews with 400 registered Iowa voters who say they definitely or probably will attend the 2016 Republican caucuses and 404 registered voters who say they definitely or probably will attend the 2016 Democratic caucuses.

Interviewers with Quantel Research contacted 2,975 randomly selected active voters from the Iowa secretary of state's voter registration list by telephone. Responses were adjusted by age, sex and congressional district to reflect all active voters in the voter registration list. Interviews were administered in English.

Questions based on the subsamples of 404 likely Democratic caucus attendees or 400 likely Republican caucus attendees each have a maximum margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percentage points. This means that if this survey were repeated using the same questions and the same methodology, 19 times out of 20, the findings would not vary from the percentages shown here by more than plus or minus 4.9 percentage points. Results based on smaller samples of respondents — such as by gender or age — have a larger margin of error.

Whatever is announced today - and I hope the Post is right - I just wanted to say congrats and thanks. Panetta was so right - hard to keep focus on a topic like oceans when there are so many other problems facing the world. But YOU did. Looking forward to hearing your speech later today. :)

Hi John - I hope you are doing well. I am having a ball at National Geographic. I know you are busy, so I will keep this short! I just wanted you to know that if you are ever ready, willing and able to announce something, we can provide much external support. We have a letter with more than 325 scientists strongly supporting no take reserves in areas of interest. I sent it to Jay and Mike yesterday. Here is a link to the draft:

<http://www.marine-conservation.org/marine-reserve-statement/>

It can be distributed quickly. We also have lots of supportive folks lined up to praise and extoll. We at NGS could provide a backdrop if need be (you may recall Clinton announced NW Hawaiian Islands here), and we have lots of "beauty shots" of specific locations of interest "in the can" ready to supply to the media.

We want it to sparkle -- a picture is worth a thousand words -- and we have them. I am not aware that anyone else does. We have no idea whether you need or want any of this, but I wanted you to know it is here. We are also working hard to get other countries to do the same both next week, and beyond.

Thanks so much for all your interest in these matters. Best, Monica

John and Jake --

We have seats for you on the plane from NY to South Carolina on Saturday. Debate prep still scheduled on Saturday from 11:00am-3:00pm -- wheels up time at approximately 4:00pm.

Please plan to travel home commercially on Monday since HRC is staying in SC for events.

Our HRC RON for the weekend is the Belmond Charleston Place.

For planning purposes, we are not holding any time for any additional debate prep in South Carolina on Saturday and would expect prep would start no earlier than 10:00am on Sunday.

Please let us know if you have any questions, thank you!

Subject: We must continue to face the challenge of guaranteeing equality and justice.

JOSELINE
PEÑA-MELNYK
FOR U.S. CONGRESS

Dear John & Mary,

In his iconic speech at the Lincoln Memorial, Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. spoke eloquently, but forlornly, of income inequality affecting African-Americans. He stated that 100 years after the end of slavery, African-Americans live "on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity." More than 50 years after his speech, too many African-Americans still languish "in the corners of American society." While we honor the life and legacy of Dr. King today, we must renew our commitment to his vision of equality and justice for all.

Let's honor his pursuit of justice and dignity by making time to serve others. Please join me in celebrating the life and teachings of Dr. King through volunteerism and community service.

Sincerely,

Joseline

John,

Governor Branstad can't be re-elected in the fall. He certainly hasn't earned re-election, but another term sets a troubling precedent.

A Branstad victory on November 4th would be nothing more than a permission slip for bad behavior.

Contribute $10, $25, $50, or more and we'll match it 3X up to $10,000 by Monday at 7 PM.

He'll justify all of his actions by saying that the people of Iowa cleared of him of all wrongdoing in the cases of secret settlements, constitutional overreaches, and unwillingness to comply with federal laws by electing him yet again. He'll say that they trust him.

Actions must have consequences. We can't just let this become the new normal.

Help us preserve the integrity of the office and replace Terry Branstad with Jack Hatch.

Contribute $10, $25, $50, or more and have your gift matched!

The clock is ticking and Iowa needs you to step up.

NYT: Cashing In on a G.O.P. Star
By Julie Bosman
<http://thecaucus.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/09/26/cashing-in-on-a-gop-star/#more-6438>

"Make a donation to Planned Parenthood," the anonymous e-mail message urged. "Of any amount. In Sarah Palin's name."

The message, which began circulating widely on the Internet last week, had one more instruction: request that the personalized thank-you card from Planned Parenthood be sent to Ms. Palin, the Republican vice-presidential nominee and a vocal opponent of abortion, at the McCain-Palin campaign headquarters in Virginia.

So far, the scheme seems to be getting a strong response. As of Friday, Planned Parenthood had taken in $802,678 in donations from 31,313 people, said a spokesman for the organization, Tait Sye. More than two-thirds of the individuals are first-time donors to Planned Parenthood, Mr. Sye said, and money came in from all 50 states.

Ms. Palin's status as a fund-raising draw for Planned Parenthood puts her in the company of President Bush, who was the target of a similar scheme in 2001, said Patt Morrison, a columnist for The Los Angeles Times who took credit for the idea.

"I envisioned a scene out of 'Miracle on 34th Street,' " Ms. Morrison wrote on The Huffington Post last week, "sacks and sacks of thank-you cards from Planned Parenthood, delivered to Bush in the Oval Office."

Cecile Richards, the president of Planned Parenthood, called the response "phenomenal," and said she wanted to personally thank the "tens of thousands of individuals who responded to this call to action."

Planned Parenthood said it would begin mailing the thank-you cards next week. The McCain campaign declined to comment.

Subject: Obama Says He Didn't Know Hillary Clinton Was Using Private Email Address - NYTimes.com

I find it odd the NYT didn't actually quote the President saying what's in their headline. Especially since the story has a disbelieving tone to his not noticing. One of us should connect with the WH just so they know that the email will show his statement to not make sense. I'm happy to do so to Josh Earnest since Jen is in a weird position, unless Cheryl or John you want to (or already have) with someone else. But it's not unreasonable to assume that Josh is going to get asked how this was possible, and he should have the factset. Especially if it's some weird technical thing with the President's email setup that he doesn't see addresses.

I have a restless mind on how this should come together and for better or worse I arrive at the table with a low profile and unburdened by the politics of their past campaigns. If I can be helpful in a working group or other, let me know. I do think I'm one of the few people in the party with deep experience in both politics and process and operations, management and finance. If I can be helpful to her, I will be.

Subject: TIME Mag Inquiry re WH Structure

John, Jen and Daniealla:

I have Time magazine inquiry below based on 2 Blueprint chapters I wrote. Invitation to be not for attribution. Just saw it so may be too late.

I am sensitive to not criticize or raise questions about how WH appears to be organized for various reasons.

I'd be inclined to say what matters is that there be the discipline to make sure all relevant voices get heard on key decisions -- in the room or in paper flow -- and that can work with many organizational structures if there is commitment to having a good informed debate and then faithful implementation of the president's decisions. All signs from outside are that this appears to be the President-elect's style. Given how ambitious the agenda, urgency, etc. the various leads on policy are necessary and essential to drive change on so many fronts simultaneously. Not sure I fully believe it but it is what I would say.

John -- that raise any issues for you (co-author and transition chair). I can skip replying if it is problematic. Any suggestions for things to watch?

Jen/D -- other thoughts?

Depends. Sometimes that is fine. But some of the activities/content of CAPAF -- thinkprogress, wonk room, mic check, and some of capaf analyses of candidate policy proposals -- are not appropriate for CAP as a 501c3 only capaf, a c4. In fact, if you inadvertantly describe any political advocacy as cap when it was capaf, the irs rulings tell us we need to send you a letter (yours whether or not to publish) correcting the record. I try to be careful when talking to always say "capaf's ... " Or cap"s.. about particiular products. But if you were not sensitized to the issue it might not end up in your notes. I thought i sent a follow up that day but may not have hit send.

We sometimes use "American Progress" sometimes to describe the two organizations together but when mentioning the specific political advocacy are careful to always try to say it was action fund.

Sorry to be confusing.

Hi, John,

Unsolicited advice from a pr person.

Hillary needs to learn to memorize the first 60 to 90 seconds of prepared remarks.

Just saw her on the news talking about Trump and his remarks denigrating women.

She had great things to say but was reading from a script which made her look programmed.

If there's any topic she can talk about passionately without a script this was it. A missed opp.

She was very good answering questions.

BTW, if you're coming to MA or NH s.this fall let me know and I can stop by and say hello.

Bush-Republicans Vote to Dismantle Medicare – Put Insurance Companies Ahead of Seniors, the Disabled, Docs and Community Pharmacists

While McCain Skips Vote in Favor of Raising Campaign Cash, Sealing Fate on Razor Thin Vote, Bush-Republicans Block Effort to Improve Medicare for Seniors, Doctors and Pharmacists

Washington – At the behest of President Bush and the Health Insurance Industry, Bush-Republicans mustered 40 votes last night to block the Medicare Improvements for Patients and Providers Act – legislation which received broad bipartisan support in the House and which would have improved Medicare for seniors, the disabled, rural residents and pharmacists and would have prevented a cut in doctors fees scheduled for next month.

The cut in doctors’ fees under Medicare, which now will take place as a result of Republicans blocking action on this legislation last night, will have an immediate and harmful impact on millions of seniors as physicians are likely to curtail or suspend services to Medicare beneficiaries.

“John McCain was more interested in raising campaign cash than protecting Medicare for seniors – while the rest of the Bush-Republicans were more interested in their loyalty to the President and insurance companies than standing up for seniors, pharmacists and doctors,” said Brad Woodhouse of Americans United for Change which has been working to eliminate insurance company subsidies under the Medicare Advantage program. Cuts to such subsidies, in part, would have been used to prevent cuts to physicians’ reimbursements under Medicare. “Last nights vote is a microcosm of the Bush-Republican Legacy – put the corporate interests first and everyone else be damned. America’s seniors can thank John McCain, George Bush and Senate Republicans for wreaking havoc on Medicare and placing their health and well being at risk. Of course, after eight years where Bush-McCain-Republicans have tried every maneuver to dismantle the safety net for seniors – from the failed effort to privatize Social Security, to the giveaways to big Pharma in the Medicare prescription drug program – should anyone really be surprised.”

I agree with #1 and #2, but those have been used before – they are good, and we should continue with them. But I really believe that Joel's thing is the show stopper that makes Bernie sputter. HRC has gotten more votes than Trump; Bernie has not. It's about the voters.

Agree. The 3 alternative ideas Brian and I had collected were:

- she's vetted -- he's not -- so the polls mean nothing
- the person the Rs (and trump) are worried about running against is HER, not him. that's why they're running ads against her. that's why they're running ads to HELP him. that's why the RNC has released press statements and even tweets admitting that they are behind sanders. because the person they don't want to run against is Hillary.
- relying on polls to show you are worthy of being president is what Trump himself does

On Fri, Mar 4, 2016 at 1:50 PM, Ron Klain <ron.klain@revolution.com> wrote:

I really do think Joel's idea is very sharp here. It shuts Sanders up. And in fact, it makes his line about the polls into a trap that allows HRC to talk about voters and people rallying to support her. A version of this can also be a pushback when Sanders hits her on superdelegates.

Adding Brian, because he and I were just brainstorming how to approach this. Brian, see below.

Maybe we simplify to something like this:

I'll let Senator Sanders talk about the polls. Let me talk about the voters. Donald Trump has gotten X.X million votes so far this election. That's a lot of support. And there's only one candidate for President – only one in either party – who has gotten more votes than Mr. Trump. And that's me. I've gotten 700,000 more votes than Trump. Not Senator Sanders – he's running 1 million votes behind Donald Trump. I'm the only one who has brought more voters to the polls, to vote for me, than Donald Trump.

Subject: RE: Debate Book - for tomorrow's prep

If current #s hold up through Saturday races how about something like this:

Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders have both talked a lot about how many voters they're turning out but so far I've won 10 states, and I have won 700 thousand more votes than Donald Trump and Sen Sanders has 1 MM fewer votes than Donald Trump. I think Sen Sanders would also have to acknowledge that I have not outpolled him significantly among African-Americans & Latinos, but among all voters over that age of 30, who total 83% of all Democratic votes cast, I beat Sen Sanders by 2 to 1 or 1.4 MM voters. I have also won our primaries in key swing states like Virginia, Iowa and Nevada and about 8 states Sen Sanders has won fewer voters than either Trump or myself.

The point is that winning in Nov. will take building a strong, diverse coalition. We are going to have to do what both Bill Clinton and Barack Obama did to win – appeal to and actually turnout the diverse coalition of voters we need to win the presidency. So far, it's fair to say that my message, my campaign is doing a much better job of building that coalition and actually getting our voters to the polls.

Subject: Debate Book - for tomorrow's prep

Dear all,

Here is the Debate Book -- this document is exactly what HRC currently has in hard copy. (We swapped in updates for about 5 sections this morning; the rest of the book was printed for her on Wednesday). Also attached are a few additional background pages that HRC asked for yesterday.

The yellow highlights on the table of contents are the sections we told her to focus on. Kristina and I will bring 7-10 hard copies of those questions, to Detroit tomorrow.

One thing that HRC asked for a good response on, is Bernie's claim that "he is the one who can beat Trump, because he is still doing better than her against Trump, in national polls." She wanted a smart reply -- whether it is saying that polls always change; or pointing to other polls; or whatever. Do people on this chain have any good ideas about that, as she will likely bring it up tomorrow? Finally, below are a few final things Kristina and I are running down, for prep tomorrow. She also wanted some good Trump hits, and we've thought of the fact that he opposed the auto bailout, and Trump University. Please let us know if you have other ideas.

Thanks so much,
Sara and Kristina

Sunday – remind her that Sunday is Bloody Sunday
New riff on – problems Detroit are not just due to trade
2-3 Trump hits – he opposed auto bailout, Trump University
New answer on -- Bernie will be Trump/polls
Corporate tax point
Pull trade stats (deficit, surplus)
Examples of his Wall Street pivots/mentions – specifics

Subject: Brian Sandoval

You have some real shrewdies at the White House, always too smart for your own good. I would write that Senate Democrats should vote no on Sandoval. Problem with this move is that the obvious move for Republican Senators from swing states who do not oppose Sandoval now is to say they might have voted for him if Obama had actually named him, but he went ahead and named a Democratic liberal so they vote no. In which we don't have any chance at 60, and we don't get any political benefit in November if they obstruct. We get zero.

Does Obama really want to take the chance of giving life tenure for the 9th seat on the court to a fellow who could turn out for him the way David Souter turned out for Bush 41?

Eric do you wonder why after 7 years of Obama Republicans control the House, the Senate and a majority of governorships and state legislatures? It is because Republicans were inflamed to vote while Democrats became depressed and stayed home. Hillary has enough problems with this right now,

If you want to depress Democratic voters in November, do Sandoval. If you want to give Republicans an excuse to obstruct any Democrat then float Sandoval, name someone else, and you give them a gift from God. They get it all. We get zero.

"She was there. She was instrumental. She was not afraid. I know. I saw it. I saw her, right there in front of me, go to the AIDS Quilt, with then President Clinton, to see her friend's panel. No First Family had ever even acknowledged it before. It was if for the first time all the death, ACT(ing) UP, pain, loss, fight, and hurt were validated.

It was stone silent on the vast Washington Mall. No fanfare. No hoopla. They simply went ... and we accidentally had stumbled upon it.

Silence. Stillness. They got out of their motorcade hand in hand and walked through the Quilt. It was THE first time it was ever acknowledged by anyone of any higher level in government. They stood. They prayed. They looked at a few other panels. They wiped tears. We were 100 feet away.

As they turned to leave, the still silence was broken by a squelching sound, like an animal in deep pain. It was me. I screamed "Thank you!" through my sobs, my voice cracking. They both turned. He put his hand up in a still wave and nodded his head - his mouth doing that mouth/chin thing he does. They turned and left. I was there. They were there....maybe too late for some we lost. But they got there first ... as soon as they could ... once the country elected two people who actually cared. Let's do it again. Hillary always."

I watched your "Imagine" speech yesterday on C-SPAN. Much much more effective tool to inspire voters for you. It's quality and tone took everyone in the room along for the ride of discovery, creation, anticipation, and vision. I hope you continue with this genre of speech. One of your best ever!!! I'm smart. John,

This is it. Tomorrow, the House will vote on the Ryan Budget – and I'm doing everything in my power to stop this radical budget from ever becoming law.

We have to fight back – now. I need your help to derail the Ryan Budget before Paul Ryan and the House GOP demolish Medicare forever, leaving our most vulnerable seniors out to dry.

The clock is ticking, and we still need 4,321 signatures before tomorrow's vote – in less than 24 hours. We can stop Rep. Ryan if we stand together, but you have to add your name right away.

Click here to fight back against the Ryan Budget by adding your name to our petition. We can't let Ryan and the GOP slash funding for Medicare.

Paul Ryan is calling it a "responsible, balanced budget," but that couldn't be farther from the truth. The Ryan Budget is nothing more than a blatant attempt to gut Medicare and abandon seniors across the country – all to keep the rich from paying their fair share.

Like you, I believe in expanding access to affordable health care, not limiting it. That's why I'm fighting tooth and nail to save Medicare and stop Ryan from undoing all the progress we have made.

I need your help to get the word out. We don't have a minute to lose.

Is really, really hard here. I get on the treadmill and struggle with a 5k at 8:00/mile pace. Dad, did you run while here? I assume no running through the streets of Kabul but was there a treadmill at the hotel?

Not sure if it is an issue with air quality, altitude, combination but I am really struggling. On a brighter note the gym is well stocked (better than McChord's) and I've been getting in some great weightlifting sessions.

Hope your running is going better than mine!

McCain Offers Top Social Security ‘Privatization’ Advocate As Surrogate

Our guest blogger is Robert Gordon , Senior Fellow at the Center for American Progress Action Fund.

Today, the McCain campaign is putting forward economist Martin Feldstein as a surrogate.

Feldstein is widely acknowledged as the “chief intellectual force behind privatization” of Social Security. That’s Feldstein’s own term. He wrote “The Case for Privatization” and “Privatizing Social Security: The Ten Trillion Dollar Opportunity.”

McCain personally endorsed Bush’s privatization plans as recently as March, but yesterday, he said “there is nothing I would demand” in a Social Security package and even said that tax increases are not “off the table.”

Social Security privatization may be another example of the McCain campaign’s private agenda — the agenda the campaign keeps to itself.

Hey John, did you see this? We really do have a massive operation going on over here. We're closing in on our goal - about $1,300 away. I need to get everything set for tomorrow, but I can buy us an extra couple hours as long as we get everything in by 9 PM. I really appreciate everything you've done already, and I hate to ask again, but is there any chance you could help us out? Here is the link to donate if you can.

Thanks again, I really mean it.

Friend,

We just ran the numbers. We need to turn out an extra 22,351 Democrats to win this race.

This could be the closest race in the country. Even after spending $3.5 million attacking me, Karl Rove and the Tea Party Super PACs have failed miserably to stop our momentum - thanks to our grassroots army.

This race is going to come down to a few votes per election district. Whoever has the better turnout operation tomorrow will win. Right now, we need to raise another $4,304 - if we can hit this goal by 7PM tonight, we can still rush the money into our GOTV program. It's not too late.

We can't waste another minute - click here to immediately rush \$20 so we can get 22,351 Democrats to the polls and beat our Tea Party opponent.

We've come so far. Our grassroots campaign will lead us to victory if we can inject some last-minute resources into the operation. Thank you for being part of the absolute best team in the country.

Subject: Telecom Upgrade November 14th

The second phase of our telecom upgrade will occur this Friday, November 14, 2014, between 6:00 PM and 8:00 PM. During this time, the Law Center telephones will be restarted in order to connect them to the new telephone infrastructure. This process will take approximately two minutes per phone.

This phase of the upgrade will also include an upgrade to our voicemail system. As a result of this upgrade, all voicemail passwords will be reset to the default. After the upgrade, you will need to enter the default password (4852) in order to access your voicemail. You will then be prompted to change your password. An added feature to the upgraded voicemail system is the ability to synchronize your voicemail with your email. After the upgrade, any new voicemails received will also appear in your email mailbox. Any saved voicemails in your box before the upgrade will be moved to the new voicemail system.

The upgrades to the phone system will also include enhanced Emergency Notification and Response features. A separate email detailing these features will be sent once they are ready to be deployed.

If you have any problems with your phone or voicemail when you arrive on Monday morning, please contact the Technology Service Desk at 202-662-9284 or help@law.georgetown.edu .

SEIU MEMBERS LAUNCH NEW TV AD ON SUNUNU'S SUPPORT FOR BUSH'S ECONOMIC POLICIES

Concord, NH – Today, SEIU announced a new television ad, titled "Register," that will air statewide on cable and broadcast throughout New Hampshire. The ad highlights John Sununu's record of support for George W. Bush's economic policies that helped to create America's current economic crisis.

The independent ad buy of more than $600,000 is in response to Sununu's efforts to portray himself as a champion for working families and Main Street businesses after years of voting in support of Bush's tax cuts for the richest Americans and helping to deregulate Wall Street.

"SEIU members are holding Senator Sununu accountable for his record of putting the needs of his campaign contributors in corporate board rooms before the needs of Granite State families," said SEIU Secretary-Treasurer Anna Burger. "A few months of campaign speeches cannot hide years of support for the failed economic agenda of Bush and Cheney."

The ad, produced by Shorr Johnson Magnus, can be viewed at: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=i_4y_g8OVSo.

The transcript follows:"Register" – 30 seconds

VO: John Sununu claims he's been careful with our money.

But it was Sununu who voted for budgets that doubled the national debt to ten trillion dollars.

Sununu voted with Bush to give tax breaks to the wealthiest one percent...

...and peanuts to the middle class.

Sununu even took a million dollars in campaign contributions from Wall Street, while voting for deregulation that led to our fiscal crisis.

John Sununu.

He's already cost us a lot of money.

Sources:

Sununu voted for budgets that doubled the national debt to ten trillion dollars.

- In 2006, Sununu voted for a budget resolution that would set broad spending and revenue targets over the next five years. The resolution would allow up to approximately $882 billion in discretionary spending for fiscal year 2007. SConRes83, [Vote 74, 3/16/06]

Sununu voted with Bush to give tax breaks to the wealthiest one percent (twice).

- Sununu voted in 2006 in favor of a conference report on the bill that would extend about $70 billion in tax cuts over a five-year period. It also allowed reduced tax rates on capital gains and dividends to be extended through 2010. HR4297, [Vote 118, 5/11/06]

Contribute $25, $50, $100 or whatever you can and make it count!

Only 33 days remain and we need to make them count if we want victory over Terry Branstad. His last four years need to be just that, his last four. Iowa doesn't need four more years of scandal and failure.

I think it's how they see themselves in this environment, which remains their big pain point that she is fighting to fix.

For the moment it also creates a slight language difference with POTUS – not a big deal but a nuance.

I think it's good too. I tracked a few suggested changes on top of Maya's.

Two questions:

1. Do we need a bit more on the economy, since so much of Baltimore conversation has become about poverty and hopelessness?
2. Are we clear what we want the soundbite to be? My guess is the body cameras?

Help the future vitality of rural life - take quick survey

Friends,

Are you interested in the future of rural communities? If so, we could use your help. If you or someone you know lives or works in a rural community, please take this online survey. The results of this survey will help create a public conversation guide about what we can do together to strengthen rural communities.

WIPPS is co-leading a national effort to address the future vitality of rural communities in America in partnership with the Kettering Foundation, National Issues Forum, Art of the Rural, and Extension organizations in nine states (including Wisconsin). The resulting issue guide will be used across the country to help rural communities address issues that matter most to them.

Again, If you live or work in a rural community, or know someone who does, we are requesting that you \(or they\) complete a short open-ended online survey by August 1.

Subject: FW: December 4th Deadline!

Hello!

I'm Katie Gulley, the Organizing Director for the BlueGreen Alliance, and I wanted to be sure you saw the email from Rob below. Our field staff are working around the country in a final push to beat the December 4th deadline for comments to the EPA urging them to support strong standards to reduce methane in the energy sector. You can help!

Send a comment to the EPA today, and share this message with five friends to encourage them to advocate for these standards!

Strong methane standards mean safer workplaces, better air quality, more energy savings, and improved public health. Beat the deadline with your comment today!

Sincerely,

Katie Gulley

Subject: December 4th Deadline!

Dear John,

The EPA has proposed new standards to greatly reduce one of the most significant factors contributing to climate change: methane leaks.

Do your part to keep workers safe on the job, while stopping climate-damaging leaks by urging the EPA to finalize these standards!

Researchers recently measured that in the U.S. alone, over 2.4 billion metric tons of methane is released into the atmosphere every year from leaks and outdated equipment in the oil and gas industry. This amount—enough to heat more than 5 million homes each year—is much more powerful in trapping heat than carbon dioxide and stays in the atmosphere for over 12 years. The use of old, wasteful methods used to produce, contain, and transport natural gas is unnecessary and blatant, and you can help stop it.

As of today, we've had nearly 900 concerned citizens send in their comments to the EPA to stop natural gas leaks, but we need YOUR help to reach our goal of 2,000 by December 4.

It takes less than two minutes of your time, and you will be playing a critical role in protecting workers and communities from wasteful practices that are harming our climate.

Send a comment to the EPA today and forward this on to friends and family to ensure a better future for our planet.

Sincerely,

Rob McCulloch

Gary, Dennis and John,

Hope guys are enjoying the holidays.

Robert Roche is going to be in NYC on 12/16 and 12/17. We were hoping to come in to follow-up on our conversation this past summer.

As you probably know, we're making great progress with Ed Meier and the policy working groups. We're also talking with Maura Keefe, Ed and Gary about bringing Bus Fwd's members to Brooklyn for a tour and briefing.

(We did something similar in Chicago for the Obama/Biden re-elect, and it was very successful.) We're also making great progress with the Convention teams about programming in Philadelphia.

Robert and I would like to continue our conversation about list swaps with Business Forward, as well as other help we can provide individually.

If you are available for drinks/dinner on 12/16 (in Brooklyn or Manhattan), or a meeting during the morning of 12/17, we would greatly appreciate it.

Jim

Subject: Stop the swift boating

John –

With the election only 4 days away, it is becoming more clear that the GOP and their corporate cronies will stop at nothing in order to win. They are desperately attempting to swift boat my friend John Douglass. We need to fight back to ensure we have John Douglass representing our Virginia families in Congress.

Whatever you are able to contribute will go to immediate use for John Douglass and the future of Virginia. Click here to donate.

Groups like Goldman Sachs, the Koch Brothers, and various right wing PACs are funding attacks on Gen. John Douglass just like they've attacked Tim Kaine, John Kerry and Max Cleland. I want to make sure that I am able to work with folks like John instead of career politicians backed by outside corporate money. Donate today and keep moving Virginia forward .

Subject: troubling news

John --

This is troubling:

We just found out that Paul Ryan's "Prosperity PAC" wrote a big check to Cheri's opponent, ex-Congressman Bobby Schilling.

Let's be clear, this PAC has nothing to do with "prosperity." It's just a front group for Ryan to shovel huge sums of money into competitive races. Well, Illinois' 17th district could be one of the closest races in the entire country.

October 31st marks the first fundraising deadline since the government shutdown. It's critical that we put up a strong showing to make it clear that we won't let an extreme right-winger represent this district ever again.

John, click here to chip in \$3 or whatever you can to support Cheri's campaign and fight back against Bobby Schilling and his Tea Party backers >>

Now that the government shutdown is over, Bobby Schilling is conveniently trying to separate himself from the Tea Party radicals that caused the shutdown. Well, we're not falling for it.

Look, we're fighting hard to keep Bobby Schilling out of Congress, but with big names like Paul Ryan getting involved, Cheri's going to need every last supporter on board.

We are going to launch the policy shop we spoke to you about sometime, ideally, in September. It will be 100 percent focused on middle class economic growth in New Jersey where we have lagged badly.

We will not have made our political decision by then but continue to lean strongly in that direction.

The launch will be a big deal, mixing the great and the good.

Do you think there is any way we could get POTUS, FLOTUS or VPOTUS to join us. Clearly, we would build it around their availability.

FYI Ost called...said that she will prob need to address Exec Council June 2/3 in DC or speak at their Teach Convention (it's a professional development) July 13/14 in DC.

Action item: Can we make a list of all labor groups we're going to want to get and what we expect we'll need to do to earn their endorsement (i.e. what mtgs/conventions are they expecting us to attend, or other interaction with their members). I want to look at these as a whole rather than as one offs--this stuff could add up very fast. My gut is we stick to closed exec board meetings and basically not address any of these conventions so we're not picking and choosing (perfect example--NEA is a week before AFT...do we really want to do two teachers' union speeches in two weeks!?). I know AFSCME, SEIU, NEA, and others are expecting us in June.

Let's go over the list at our next politics mtgs and decide what we feel we need to hold on the schedule.

Below that you'll find additional information on Rusty Rueff's artistic and philanthropic engagement from his website, rustyrueff.com.

As First Lady

1. HRC turned the WH "Jacqueline Kennedy/First Lady garden" it into a sculpture garden by installing a set of changing exhibits to represent artists from different regions around the US.
2. She led a program called "Saving America's Treasures." which was an effort to restore or renovate historical sites/ sites of artistic significance across the country.
3. She installed a set of changing exhibits of art crafts at the WH and produced a coffee table book of American crafts. Mindful of representing fully panoply of artists and crafts people-- regional diversity and diversity of types of artists. Native American and African American artists represented. Also artists who were well known as well as those who were less well know.
4. She insisted on having modern American works displayed in public and private rooms at the WH, which had previously only had traditional neoclassical artwork.
5. She pushed art and education as a policy matter
6. She always visited locations of artistic and historical significance in her travels.

As Sec State

1. HRC revitalized the "Arts and Embassies" program which places american art in our embassies around the world.
2. She gave a speech when presenting the Medal of Arts which described american art was a part of our diplomacy (example of smart power).

Rusty Rueff

Rusty's website rustyrueff.com describes him as a person "dedicated to operating, learning, writing, speaking, coaching, consulting and volunteering at an exciting intersection of technology, arts & entertainment, politics, talent management, and faith."

Friend,

If you're anything like me, you get emails from a lot of politicians and political committees. And on the last day of the month, like today, it can get a little overwhelming.

I am sorry that I'm adding to the fray, but I want you to keep two things in mind as you sort through your inbox today:

1. We ACTUALLY have to file a fundraising report tomorrow. While other candidates and committees may have internal goals they'd like to reach, we have to publish our success (or failure) for everyone to see after midnight tonight.
2. And unlike candidates whose next election is over a year away (at the earliest), ours is just 66 days out.

We're $1,765 away from fully funding our $125,000 Rapid Response Fund, but the deadline is at midnight tonight.

Can you make a \$5 donation right now? We're close, and your donation could be the one that puts us over the top.

I wouldn't email you if it wasn't important — and this report is critical. The press will examine every number and then write about what our chances are in November.

Thank you for your support, and enjoy the rest of your holiday weekend.

Hey

As Sarah has been reaching out to Kurt, he's told her that he already did a memo working with you on HRC's transition. For that reason - coupled with other things he's said - she's concerned that he's bringing a pre-set/non-Obama-focused view to the work.

We're addressing in various ways, but if you haven't spoken with him, would you raise the importance of working through an Obama lens?

Hillary Clinton said she was going to hit the road. And she did.

Around the time a video was posted announcing her candidacy for president, Mrs. Clinton began a two-day drive to Iowa where she is scheduled to have her first campaign event on Tuesday.

The surprise road trip was Mrs. Clinton's idea and would not have been made public had someone who saw her at a gas station in Pennsylvania not alerted CNN, an aide said. The aide added that Mrs. Clinton wanted to visit with people at rest stops and diners along the way.

In the announcement video, Mrs. Clinton said she would be "hitting the road to earn your vote."

On Sunday evening, Mrs. Clinton tweeted , "Road trip! Loaded the van & set off for IA. Met a great family when we stopped this afternoon. More to come" along with a photo of a family and their baby.

Mrs. Clinton is traveling in the van, driven by a Secret Service agent, that takes her to work and events around New York. She is accompanied by a few aides.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Clinton will talk to students and educators at a roundtable discussion in Monticello, Iowa, followed by a Wednesday discussion with small business owners in Norwalk, Iowa.

IN THE NEWS:

Clinton and Obama Prepare to Spar in Final Debate Before Major, Big-State Primary Races

Date: Tuesday, February 26, 2008

By: Jackie Jones, BlackAmericaWeb.com

Views are mixed on whether a strong showing in Tuesday's debate -- or even a colossal mistake by her opponent -- will shore up Sen. Hillary Clinton's flagging campaign for the Democratic nomination for president.

Clinton and Sen. Barack Obama will meet in Cleveland for a final debate before the March 4 primaries in Ohio, Texas, Vermont and Rhode Island. After leading by double digits weeks ago, Clinton is now ahead of Obama by seven points in Ohio and finds herself in a statistical dead heat in Texas -- two states that political observers say are critical for Clinton if she is to remain in the race.

Clinton has not won a campaign or a caucus since Super Tuesday on Feb. 5. Obama has won 11 races in a row including, last Wednesday, the Democrats Abroad vote.

"Tuesday's debate means everything for both candidates," Democratic political strategist Craig Kirby told BlackAmericaWeb.com. "After more than 14 months of debates across the country, it all comes down to 90 minutes where each candidate will have the opportunity to lay the foundation for the next week of conversation and into the voting booths on March 4."

Others suggest the impact of candidate debates is questionable, at best.

"I think the election is a do-or-die thing, but I'm not convinced these debates are that important," countered David A. Hollinger, a professor of American History at the University of California-Berkeley.

Hollinger said Obama has become a better debater over time, and his message has resonated more strongly with voters, who seem to be paying closer attention than ever to candidates and their positions.

In a recent article for The Chronicle of Higher Education, Hollinger wrote that Obama's candidacy challenges the nation's ideas about race and identity politics, maintaining that he has demonstrated "a formidable appeal to white voters."

That makes it more difficult for Clinton to shake off Obama as merely a niche candidate.

"His strong showing in Virginia on Feb. 12 advanced a trend already visible in caucus states. His greatest margin of victory so far was not in predominantly black Washington, D.C., but in Idaho, a social and cultural 'red' state with almost no black voters," Hollinger wrote in The Chronicle. "Obama's percentages have also increased among black voters, who polls had indicated were pragmatically ready to stick with Clinton until Obama showed that he, like she, could draw enough white voters to make victory a possibility. His victories ... reflect a capacity to reach across the color line that no American of his color has ever before remotely approached."

"I'm more interested in the overall contours of the campaign" than in the debates, Hollinger told BlackAmericaWeb.com.

"Ohio will once again decide who wins the White House," Ohio Democratic Party Chairman Chris Redfern told reporters over the weekend. "The Ohio Democratic debate is important because it will allow the next president of the United States to address the issues most important to Ohioans."

Part of the debate's emphasis will be on the economy and the loss of 250,000 manufacturing jobs in the state of Ohio in the past four years.

Clinton and Obama have clashed over NAFTA, the 1993 trade policy act that instead of improving trade between the U.S. and its neighbors, has resulted in American companies outsourcing jobs overseas and depressing the Mexican economy by driving down wages.

Obama has charged that NAFTA was bad for the U.S. economy and that Clinton supported it. Clinton has recently sought to put distance between herself and the trade agreement, and "argued that while NAFTA 'passed' during husband Bill Clinton's administration in 1993, President George H.W. Bush actually 'negotiated' the deal," according to The Washington Post.

On Monday, the Clinton campaign responded to a mailing sent out by the Obama campaign last week that attack Clinton's position on NAFTA. Calling Obama's literature "lies" and "distortions," the Clinton campaign sent out automated calls in Ohio telling voters:

"NAFTA has hurt Ohio families, and I have a plan to fix it. My opponent does not. I'll appoint a trade prosecutor to enforce our trade agreements and crack down on China's unfair trade practices. I'll eliminate tax breaks for companies that ship our jobs overseas, and invest in creating good jobs right here in Ohio."

After the more conciliatory tone in their debate in Austin, Texas last week, Clinton now has gone on the offensive and challenged Obama to a showdown over their positions on trade, universal health care, foreign policy and what she said is the Illinois senator's lack of experience in public life.

"We're going to emphasize more and more the experience gap," Clinton recently told several hundred supporters who paid at least $500 to attend a Boston fundraiser. "You'll hear a lot about it the next eight days."

The New York senator said the posters voters are bringing to her events indicate the issue of experience is coming to the forefront.

"When I first started, it was 'You Go, Girl,' 'Women Making History,' all about the pioneering nature of my candidacy," Clinton said. Recently, she said, the signs had changed.

"In Houston last night, it was, 'We Want Experience, Not An Experiment,' and 'The White House Is No Place for Training Wheels,'" she said.

Clinton blamed her woes in part on unfair press coverage, but said she believed Obama had come under increased media scrutiny in recent days.

She even urged the group to watch the latest episode of "Saturday Night Live," which featured a skit mocking last Thursday's CNN debate in Texas as little more than a love fest for Obama.

But Clinton can expect to take some heat on the experience issue as well.

"Both Democratic candidates continue to present challenges going into this debate, as they've failed to show how they are prepared to lead on the issues that matter most to Americans," said Tara Wall, a conservative commentator and former senior advisor for the Republican National Committee.

"While Sen. Clinton resorts to blatant pandering and divisiveness, Sen. Obama continues to come up short on presenting any substantive plan on a host of issues," Wall told BlackAmericaWeb.com. "This runs in stark contrast to a Republican agenda that seeks to grow the economy by letting us keep more of what we earn, make health care more affordable, accessible and portable without the bureaucratic red tape and keep America safer at home and abroad."

She can also expect to take some heat from black voters who not only were unimpressed by her remarks in last week's debate, but also her failure to specifically appeal for the black vote during her appearance Saturday at the end of the State of the Black Union forum in New Orleans. Asked by moderator Tavis Smiley how important the black vote was to her candidacy, Clinton didn't answer directly.

"Obviously, this is a very competitive race. We're both working as hard as we know how," she said of herself and Obama. "We should have to get out and work for every single person's vote. There is no entitlement here, there's no guarantee. I do believe the constituents that historically have supported the Democratic nominee" -- blacks, labor, Latinos and blue-collar workers -- "we must be united once we have a nominee."

"There is going to be a very competitive race with the Republicans," Clinton said. "If we are not united, we will not win."

Some observers question Clinton's decision to fight for the nomination, despite 11 straight losses in primary contests.

"She already knows that she doesn't have a leg to stand on, but rather than step out graciously, she's having a hard time losing to a black man," opined Barbara Harrid of Bowie, Maryland. "If it had been a white man, she would have stepped aside, and that's why she can't answer the question asked of her."

Harrid told BlackAmericaWeb.com that Tuesday was already a moot point and that Clinton's challenge to Obama for "a real debate" is simply that "she's trying to provoke him, but he won't take the bait."

Obama's Ohio Grilling

By Alec MacGillis

CLEVELAND -- The Clinton campaign has sent indication that Barack Obama better be ready for a tough debate here tonight ("Meet me in Ohio," the senator herself warned on Saturday). If he is in for some tough questions, then Obama got a decent tuneup in this city two days ago, when he attended a meeting with about 100 Jewish community leaders.

Those in attendance got right to the point, asking Obama about just about every topic that has so far caused some qualms about him in some quarters of the country's Jewish community, qualms that could pose a real problem for him in the general election in crucial states like Florida: about the outspoken pastor of his church and his link to Louis Farrakhan, about Obama's views on Palestinians, about the e-mails passing the false claim that he is a Muslim, and about his plans for opening greater dialogue with the Muslim world, including with Iran.

Obama's answers were, on several points, more expansive than just about anything he has offered on the subject in the past. He distanced himself somewhat from his pastor, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright, saying he was "like an old uncle who sometimes will say things that I don't agree with," and he condemned Farrakhan, who received an award from a church publication and last weekend endorsed Obama. He also distanced himself from his informal foreign policy adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, the former Carter national security adviser, who has upset some Jewish leaders with his endorsement of the authors of a recent book about the "Israel lobby." At the same time, though, Obama lamented some of the limits imposed on the debate over the Israel-Palestine question within the U.S.

"Because of the pressure that Israel is under, I think the U.S. pro-Israel community is sometimes a little more protective or concerned about opening up that conversation," he said. He added at another point: "There is a strain within the pro-Israel community that says unless you adopt a unwavering pro-Likud approach to Israel that you're anti-Israel, and that can't be the measure of our friendship with Israel."

Following are excerpts of some of the most revealing parts of the 45-minute discussion.

On Obama's Chicago church, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright and Louis Farrakhan:

I am member of the Unity Church of Christ, Trinity United Church of Christ, been there for 20 years. And although this is an improvement because you don't think I am Muslim, which is the other... [laughter] You know, so, slowly we are progressing here. It is a very conventional African American church. If you go to, if you were there at the church, you would be hearing gospel music and people preaching about Jesus. It is very conventional in that sense.

It is true that my pastor, Jeremiah Wright, who will be retiring this month, is somebody who on occasion can say controversial things. Most of them, by the way, are controversial directed at the African American community and calling on them [to] start reading books and turn off the TV set and engage in self-help. And he is very active in prison ministries and so forth. It is also true that he comes out of the '60s -- he is an older man. That is where he cut his teeth. That he has historically been interested in the African roots of the African American experience.

He was very active in the South Africa divestment movement, and you will recall that there was a tension that arose between the African American and the Jewish communities during that period when we were dealing with apartheid in South Africa, because Israel and South Africa had a relationship at that time. And that cause -- that was a source of tension. So there have been a couple of occasions where he made comments with relation, rooted in that. Not necessarily ones that I share. But that is the context within which he has made those comments.

He does not have a close relationship with Louis Farrakhan. Louis Farrakhan is a resident of Chicago, and as a consequence he has been active in a range of community activities, particularly around ex-offenders and dealing with them. I have been a consistent, before I go any further, a consistent denunciator of Louis Farrakhan, nobody challenges that. And what is true is that, recently this is probably, I guess last year. An award was given to Farrakhan for his work on behalf of ex-offenders completely unrelated to his controversial statements. And I believe that was a mistake and showed a lack of sensitivity to the Jewish community, and I said so. But I have never heard an anti-Semitic [remark] made inside of our church. I have never heard anything that would suggest anti-Semitism on part of the pastor.

He is like an old uncle who sometimes will say things that I don't agree with. And I suspect there are some of the people in this room who have heard relatives say some things that they don't agree with. Including, on occasion, directed at African Americans that maybe a possibility that's just -- I am not suggesting that's definitive. So the point I make is this, that I understand the concerns and the sensitivities, and one of my goals constantly in my public career has been to try to bridge what was a historically powerful bond between the African American and Jewish communities that has been frayed in recent years. For a whole variety of reasons. I think that I have served as an effective bridge, and that's the reason I have overwhelming support among the Jewish community that knows me best, which is the Jewish community in Chicago. And I think that anybody who has friends among the Jewish community in Chicago should check out those credentials.

But I do appreciate the opportunity to clarify those concerns. And as I said, that last point I would make is that you know my pastor is going to be retiring over the next month. So my general view, and the reason that I raise this, this is always a sensitive point, what you don't want to do is distance yourself or kick somebody away, because you are now running for president and you are worried about perceptions, particularly when someone is basically winding down their life and their career.

On Brzezinski and e-mails being circulated that question Obama's commitment to Israel:

"There is a spectrum of views in terms of how the U.S. and Israel should be interacting. It has evolved over time. It means that somebody like Brzezinski, who when he was national security adviser would be considered not outside of the mainstream in terms of his perspective on these issues, is now considered by many in the Jewish community anathema. I know Brzezinski, [but] he's not one of my key advisers. I've had lunch with him once, I've exchanged e-mails with him maybe three times. He came to Iowa to introduce me for a speech on Iraq. He and I agree that Iraq was an enormous strategic blunder and that input from him has been useful in assessing Iraq, as well as Pakistan, where actually, traditionally, if you will recall he was considered a hawk. The liberal wing of the Democratic Party was very suspicious of Brzezinski precisely because he was so tough on many of these issues. I do not share his views with respect to Israel. I have said so clearly and unequivocally.

The others that you refer to are former members of the Clinton administration. Somebody like a Tony Lake, the former national security adviser, or Susan Rice -- these are not anti-Israel individuals. These are people who strongly believe in Israel's right to exist. Strongly believe in a two-state solution. Strongly believe that the Palestinians have been irresponsible and have been strongly critical of them. Share my view that Israel has to remain a Jewish state, that the U.S. has a special relationship with the Jewish state. There's no inkling that there has been anything in anything that they've written that would suggest they're not stalwart friends of Israel.

This is where I get to be honest, and I hope I'm not out of school here. I think there is a strain within the pro-Israel community that says unless you adopt a unwavering pro-Likud approach to Israel that you're anti-Israel, and that can't be the measure of our friendship with Israel. If we cannot have a honest dialogue about how do we achieve these goals, then we're not going to make progress. And frankly, some of the commentary that I've seen which suggests guilt by association or the notion that unless we are never ever going to ask any difficult questions about how we move peace forward or secure Israel that is nonmilitary or non-belligerent or doesn't talk about just crushing the opposition, that that somehow is being soft or anti-Israel, I think we're going to have problems moving forward. And that, I think, is something we have to have an honest dialogue about.

None of these e-mails talk about the fact that on the other side, members of my national finance committee, like Lester Crown, are considered about as hawkish and tough when it comes to Israel as anybody in the country. So, there's got to be some balance here. I've got a range of perspectives and a range of advisers who approach this issue. They would all be considered well within the mainstream of that bipartisan consensus that I raised or that we talked about in terms of being pro-Israel. There's never been any of my advisers who questioned the need for us to provide Israel with security, with military aid, with economic aid. That there has to be a two-state solution, that Israel has to remain a Jewish state. None of my advisers would suggest that, so I think it's important to keep some of these things in perspective. I understand people's concern with Brzezinski, given how much offense the Israeli lobby raised, but he's not one of my central advisers.

There is an article in Newsweek, not to make this overly political, this issue that shows that there has been a fairly systemic effort on the part of some of my opponent's supporters, I won't say it was sanctioned from the top, to constantly feed this suspicion, and I want people to take my words and my track record of years on this issue to heart. I got to admit this one is a plan.

On the political sensitivity of the Palestinian question inside the U.S.:

In terms of advisers and the kind of debate I think is fruitful, one of the things that struck me when I went to Israel was how much more open the debate was around these issues in Israel than they are sometimes here in the United States. It's very ironic. I sat down with the head of Israeli security forces, and his view of the Palestinians was incredibly nuanced because he's dealing with these people every day. There's good and there's bad, and he was willing to say sometimes we make mistakes and we made this miscalculation and if we are just pressing down on these folks constantly without giving them some prospects for hope, that's not good for our security situation. There was a very honest, thoughtful debate taking place inside Israel. All of you, I'm sure, have experienced this when you travel there.

Understandably, because of the pressure that Israel is under, I think the U.S. pro-Israel community is sometimes a little more protective or concerned about opening up that conversation. But all I'm saying though is that actually, ultimately should be our goal, to have that same clear-eyed view about how we approach these issues.

On whether the Democrats have to worry about Jewish voters deserting for the Republican Party over issues like Iran:

Look, the Jewish community is a) diverse, b) has interests beyond Israel. There is a ... the tradition of the Jewish community in America as a progressive force that is concerned with the poor, is concerned with the vulnerable, is concerned with children, is concerned with civil rights, is concerned with civil liberties. Those are values that I believe are much more evident in our Democratic Party, and that can't be forgotten. I think that what I've seen, and you would know better than I would, is that to the extent that there's been bleeding over into the Republican Party, it all has to do with this issue of Israel. And what I would simply suggest is look at the consequences of George Bush's policies. The proof is in the point. I do not understand how anybody who is concerned about Israel's security and the threat of Iran could be supportive of George Bush's foreign policy. It has completely backfired. It is indisputable that Iran is the biggest strategic beneficiary of the war in Iraq. We have spent what will soon be close to a trillion dollars strengthening Iran, expanding their influence. How is that helpful to Israel? How is that helpful to Israel? You can't make that argument. And so the problem that we've seen in U.S. foreign policy generally has been this notion that being full of bluster and rattling sabers and being quick on the draw somehow makes you more secure.

And keep in mind that I don't know anybody in the Democratic Party, and I will say this for Hillary Clinton and I will say this for myself, who has indicated in any way that we would tolerate and allow to fester terrorist threats, that we wouldn't hunt down, capture or kill terrorists, that haven't been supportive of Israel capturing or killing terrorists. So it's not like we're a bunch of folks asking to hold hands and sing Kumbaya. When Israel launched its counterattack against Hezbollah in Lebanon during the summer of 2006, I was in South Africa at the time, a place that was not particularly friendly to Israel at the time, and I was asked by the press, what did you think? And I said, if somebody invades my country or is firing rockets into my country or kidnapping my soldiers, I will not tolerate that. And there's no nation in the world that would. So I don't see this softness within the Democratic Party on these issues. The question is, can we use our military power wisely? Can we be strategic in terms of how we move forward? And I think that is profoundly in the interests of Israel and in the interests of U.S. security.

On whether there should be negotiations with Hamas:

The answer is no. The answer is no and the distinction would be that Hamas is represented in the Palestinian legislature, or it was before the current rift, but they're not the head of state. They are not a recognized government. So I think there is a distinction to be drawn there and a legitimate distinction to be drawn. Now again, going back to my experiences in Israel and the discussions I've had with security officials there, I think that there are communications between the Israeli government and Hamas that may be two or three degrees removed, but people know what Hamas is thinking and what's going on, and the point is that with respect to Hamas, you can't have a conversation with somebody who doesn't think you should be on the other side of the table. At the point where they recognize Israel and its right to exist, at the point where they recognize that they are not going to be able to shove their worldview down the throats of others but are going to have to sit down and negotiate without resort to violence, then I think that will be a different circumstance. That's not the circumstance that we're in right now.

On opening up dialogue with Muslim world:

This is where I actually do think having lived in a Muslim country when I was a child is helpful in terms of giving a worldview and a world perspective. Now keep in mind, Indonesia is not the Arab world. So its brand of Islam was always very different. Women were riding on Vespas and going to work, and people weren't wearing head scarves until very recently -- that was actually an import from the Middle East. But here's what's interesting about Indonesia, it's a good case study. It had had a very tolerant, mild brand of Islam all the time that I was living there and basically up and through '97. And what happened was that you'll recall the Asian financial crisis hit them extraordinarily hard. Their gross domestic product contracted by 30 percent -- they had the equivalent of a Great Depression, but this was a country that was already extraordinarily poor. So, there was a direct correlation between the collapse of that economy and the rise of fundamentalist Islam inside of Indonesia. Partly it was exported by Saudi Wahhabist schools that were sent in and financing schools there, and suddenly you started seeing head scarves on the streets and Islamic organizations that were parroting some of the fundamentalist and more fanatical brands of Islam that we associate with the Middle East.

And the reason I raise that point is that although people will often say, well, terrorists are drawn from the middle class and just being poor doesn't mean that you're automatically ascribe to violent jihadist tendencies. What is absolutely true is that in the Arab world and in the Muslim world, I do think there is a correlation between the degree to which those communities function properly, give people hope, give people a sense of direction, give children education, and how vulnerable they are to these violent ideologies.

So what lessons do we learn from that, then? I am not naïve. There is a hard core of jihadist fundamentalists who we can't negotiate with. We have to hunt them down and knock them out. Incapacitate them. That's the military aspects of dealing with this phenomenon. Now, somebody like a Richard Clarke would estimate that the hard-core jihadists would gladly blow up this room -- maybe it's 30,000 people, maybe it's 40,000 people, maybe it's 50,000 people. But it is a finite number. And that is where military action and intelligence has to be directed. So all the things I've talked about in the past -- improving our intelligence capacity, improving our alliances, rolling up financial support, improving our homeland security, making sure that we have strike forces that are effective -- that's all the military, intelligence, police work that's required.

The question, then, is what do we do with the 1.3 billion Muslims, who are along a spectrum of belief. Some extraordinarily moderate, some very pious but not violent. How do we reach out to them? And it is my strong belief that that is the battlefield that we have to worry about, and that is where we have been losing badly over the last seven years. That is where Iraq has been a disaster. That is where the lack of effective public diplomacy has been a disaster. That is where our failure to challenge seriously human rights violations by countries like Saudi Arabia that are our allies has been a disaster. And so what we have to do is to speak to that broader Muslim world in a way that says we will consistently support human rights, women's rights. We will consistently invest in the kinds of educational opportunities for children in these communities, so that madrasas are not their only source of learning. We will consistently operate in ways that lead by example, so that we have no tolerance for a Guantanamo or renditions or torture. Those all contribute to people at least being open to our values and our ideas and a recognition that we are not the enemy and that the clash of civilizations is not inevitable.

Now, as I said, we enter into those conversations with the Muslim world being mindful that we also have to defend ourselves against those who will not accept the West, no matter how appropriately we engage. And that is the realism that has to leaven our hopefulness. But, we abandon the possibility of conversation with that broader Muslim world at our own peril. I think all we do then is further isolate it and feed the kinds of jihadist fanaticism that I think can be so...

Democrats' racial divide becoming ever more evident

By JAY ROOT

Star-Telegram Staff Writer

Democrats have long depended on a rainbow-like racial coalition to win races against Republicans, but the fight between Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama has revealed an increasingly common and sometimes bitter split between blacks and Hispanics.

As Hispanics have grown in numbers, the tension has increased, and it's produced a racial minefield for the Democratic presidential candidates. Both camps publicly downplay the divide, but it has occasionally spilled out into the open, and it could be a significant factor in the March 4 Texas primaries.

Raw feelings were evident in a recent complaint from Jesse Diaz, president of the Dallas-area League of United Latin American Citizens. Diaz, identifying himself as a Clinton supporter, said in a letter posted on the CNN Web site that Hispanics in Dallas are not about to "jump on the Obama Express."

"When Senator Obama's campaign rolls into Dallas, the 'Dallas Phenomenon' will reflect the racist and biased distaste Dallas' black leadership has shown towards Dallas' Hispanic community for decades," Diaz wrote.

Diaz' chief complaint is that black leaders show favoritism to African-Americans in government jobs and leadership posts. He stood by his comments in an interview, saying that "what Anglos did to African-Americans, African-Americans are now doing to Hispanics."

Some experts say his views reflect an uncomfortable reality: As Hispanics and blacks compete for jobs and influence, a racial divide often shows up at the ballot box.

"We saw that in California, where actually Hillary did much better among Latinos than she was projected to do," said Earl Ofari Hutchinson, columnist and author of the book The Latino Challenge to Black America. "We like to think that blacks and Latinos have this great coalition on a lot of issues all the way from health care to jobs and discrimination. But it's not true."

Obama says blacks and Hispanics have common interests on key issues like health care and education -- notwithstanding occasional racial flare-ups.

"In any city, some of these tensions may crop up as groups are competing for political power," he told the Star-Telegram. "But I think the broad long-term interests of both African-Americans and Hispanic Americans are much more in common than they are different. And that's what we're trying to build upon in this campaign."

Obama has racked up increasingly large margins among African-Americans in the 2008 election season, though Clinton has garnered endorsements from prominent black leaders. What's clear is that for Clinton to win Texas -- shaping up as a make-or-break contest for her -- she needs a sizeable Hispanic turnout that breaks her way.

Latinos could make up a third or more of the Democratic electorate, and Clinton has strong support in Hispanic South Texas, where elected officials say her deep personal ties and name make her the odds-on favorite in the region. How Obama fares with Hispanic Democrats won't be clear until Election Day. But Obama supporters say he has proven crossover appeal. State Rep. Pete Gallego, D-Alpine, said Obama is cutting into Clinton's base by making inroads with younger Hispanics who don't feel bound by cultural identity or past loyalties.

"To see a person of color in such a prominent position helps all people of color," said Gallego, who has endorsed the Illinois senator. "Some are focused on the past. He talks about tomorrow."

Is Obama a Modern Version of the Teflon Man?

Dr. Sherman N. Miller

I wonder if the Senator Hillary Clinton's campaign was attempting to exploit teachings of the great Chinese War Philosopher Sun Tzu documented in the book "The Art of War" against Senator Barack Obama.

"During the early morning spirits are keen, during the day they flag, and in the evening thoughts turn towards home.

"And therefore those skilled in war avoid the enemy when his spirit is keen and attack him when it is sluggish and his soldiers homesick. This is control of the moral factor."

The problem with employing this thinking is Senator Obama is a charismatic speaker who knows how to establish an emotional link between him and the populace. Surely, Senator Obama has read or heard of the teachings of Sun Tzu for his campaign appears to demonstrate that they know Senator Clinton well where on the other hand the Clinton people appear to be wasting time attempting to turn Obama's verbal communication strength to his weakness.

Sun Tzu offers some other teachings that that Clinton people might ponder.

"Therefore I say: 'Know the enemy and know yourself; in a hundred battles you will never be in peril.

"When you are ignorant of the enemy but know yourself, your chances of winning or losing are equal."

It is difficult to believe that the Clinton people have studied Senator Obama because she appears to be reaching for straws to find something with which to embarrass him in the press. On the other hand, Senator Obama appears to have studied the media strengths of the late President Ronald Reagan, so he is morphing slowly into a modern version of the Teflon Man.

Top Clinton official: Blacks will come around to Hillary if she wins the nomination

Harold Ickes is a no-holds-barred campaign official who will do anything for his candidate to win the Democratic nomination.

And if Sens. Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton are close in delegates, he says he will push hard for superdelegates to choose the former First Lady, even if Obama is leading her in pledged delegates.

In a story by Roger Simon on Politico.com, Ickes is asked if such a plan of action will lead to a fractured Democratic Party, especially among African Americans, and he basically says, "No big deal."

"There will be some hurt feelings initially," Ickes said. "But in a very tight election, Barack Obama will swing in behind Hillary Clinton and black people will vote for her and she will be able to bring in Hispanic voters also."

Harold, you might think you know black people. But as someone who has a radio show targeting black folks in Chicago (WVON-AM); a blog on a black female website (Essence.com); a commentator for a black cable network (TV One); run three black newspapers (Houston Defender, Dallas Weekly, Chicago Defender); a black website (BlackAmericaWeb.com) been a news editor of a black national magazine (Savoy Magazine); and filed reports for a black radio network (American Urban Radio Networks), I know my people far better than you.

And I can guarantee you that if Sen. Obama is leading among pledged delegates, and the superdelegates throw the election to Sen. Clinton, she can bank on a loss in November.

Why? Her negatives are already at high levels, ranging between 42 and 44 percent. That means that she can ill-afford any slippage in any key demographic.

Clinton can't afford to lose even 3 to 5 percent of black voters, who are the base of the Democratic Party. If she loses that amount, she loses the election.

Black turnout is critical. A disenchanted black electorate could stay at home, thus having the same effect. I've even gotten calls from yellow dog Democrats, many who are still angry with Bill Clinton's references to Rev. Jesse Jackson when Obama won the South Carolina primary, who have said they will vote for McCain before they vote for her.

These are folks who are also able to write pretty big checks, so they are no joke.

I got an email Monday night from a prominent and well-paid African American woman who said: "My 16-year-old, the one who 3 months ago had nothing to say or do with politics, now says if Clinton wins she's campaigning for Ralph Nader."

This is not folks who are overemotional about Obama. The view that the Clintons will stoop to any level is strong, and I would not misjudge this if I'm Ickes.

My suggestion to Clinton? You better move ahead of Obama among pledged delegates or you will face a crisis unlike any other you have ever encountered. Yes, even THAT crisis.

Harold, you might think you know black people, but I know them a little better than you. This will be a no-win situation for Hillary Clinton. So you better win it fair and square, and not depend on the superdelegates, or there will be hell to pay, and the Democrats will guarantee a McCain presidency.

Question of the Day: If Obama leads Clinton among pledged delegates, but hasn't received the 2,025, and the superdelegates put Clinton over the top, will you support her in November?

Mistake by the Lake

Tonight at the Wolstein Center at Cleveland State University, Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama will have at each other one last time before next week's primary elections in the Buckeye and Lone Star states.

The latest Quinnipiac poll found Clinton leads Obama 51 to 40 percent in Ohio, down from 55 to 34 percent a month ago. With her back against the wall, she'll take it.

Cleveland Rep. Stephanie Tubbs Jones, a "top-tier cheerleader" for Clinton, will likely have a good seat from which to ponder whether it is mistake to ignore the wishes of her constituents. Rev. Marvin McMickle, an Obama supporter, told the Chicago Tribune:

She is enormously beloved here, but she is completely out of step with her district. [Jones is] on the wrong side of this campaign and she's on the wrong side of history.

Jones is not alone. Other Congressional Black Caucus superdelegates are swimming against the tide. For the first time in nearly a decade, Rep. John Lewis has drawn a primary challenger.

At the recent "State of the Black Union 2008," Jones lamented the attacks on CBC members "who have paid their dues and served their time." She noted that "politics is all about relationships" and CBC members have "preexisting relationships" with Clinton. She added:

Some of us have to be over here. Some of us have to be over there so that we don't get locked out of the process.

The presidential debate will air live on MSNBC at 9pm ET and 8pm CT.

10/18/2016

There's been even more bluster than usual from the Sanders campaign, this time in an effort to disqualify Hillary Clinton's historic victory in Monday night's Iowa caucus.

Disparaging good news for Hillary Clinton has become a pattern for the Sanders camp. If you support someone else? You're dismissed as part of the "establishment," unless of course they want to claim your support in ads anyways. If a process doesn't go their way? It's invalid or flawed or they blame the Iowans who ran it.

In Iowa, the Sanders camp started floating conspiracy theories leading up to the caucus. First, it was two weeks ago when they posited that Microsoft might steal the caucus from them. Now that the caucus is over, they are calling into question the results that were reported by everyday Iowans.

Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus with incredibly high turnout - a level of turnout the Sanders camp claimed would earn them a win. It was a close contest and a hard fought campaign. But Hillary won. And once it became apparent that they had lost, the Bernie Sanders campaign began to peddle frivolous claims that have been disproven in an effort to poison an otherwise historic night for Hillary Clinton, our supporters, and volunteers.

Remember coin flip-gate where people claimed Hillary won all the coin tosses? Turns out that wasn't true. In fact, according to the official count, Sen. Sanders won more coin tosses than Hillary Clinton.

Or how about the "90 precincts" with no chairs? Also untrue. Certainly there were precincts that took a while to report but once they all did, it was clear Hillary had won.

Now the Sanders campaign is disputing the reported results that were sent in by everyday Iowans - volunteers, no less! - to the Democratic Party. All three campaigns have checked the results of certain precincts against their own data reported to them from volunteers. That's normal. For the Sanders campaign's challenges, there are 7 total precincts they are questioning (out of a whopping total 1,681 precincts!) and the Iowa Democratic Party is checking the results on a few more. And they will follow the same standard procedure for these questions as they did for precincts we asked them to look at - they'll look at the numbers reported that night, check the math and figure out if there are any discrepancies or misallocation of delegates.

Here's the kicker. Even if the Sanders campaign were to win all of their challenges - the marginal bump they receive in support would not be enough to overcome Hillary Clinton's win margin. Those are just the facts.

Here's the math.

Total Precincts in Contest: 11 (7 from Sanders and 4 from the Iowa Democratic Party)

Total State Delegates being Contested: 1.7947 (not enough to change outcome)

If every contest were to go in the favor of Sanders:

HRC = -.775

Sanders = +.758

MOM = +.0166

It may be inconvenient for the Sanders campaign that Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus, but it's the truth. Eight years ago Hillary came in third here in Iowa and when she did, she congratulated the winner. We suggest Senator Sanders do the same.

I just told her about them calling for an audit and Sanders campaign saying that they are looking at some inconsistencies.

She is very upset about it – convinced they will try to take the victory away from her and wear the party down. She wants a big effort to fight here.

Conference - Cyber Security: Risk, Recovery, and Resilience

September 16, 2015

12:00pm - 5:00pm

Location:

American Security Project

[1100 New York Ave NW 7th Floor West Tower
Washington, DC 20005](#)

New advancements in technology continue to integrate more of our private data and information together across multiple devices and access points. With this increase in accessibility comes greater risks of hacker attacks and breaches. Cyber security and the tools associated with it are on the front lines in protecting our information.

In the wake of major security breaches, including OPM, Sony, and Target, cyber security has taken center stage in talks of national security and defense. As the United States continues to rely on technology for government and military operations, cyber security is needed more than ever before.

Over the course of the conference, our expert panelists will discuss the issues surrounding cyber security and challenges we will face moving forward.

The conference will be held Wednesday, September 16, 2015 at ASP's conference facilities in Washington, D.C.

Not sure if either of these was in the print edition, so flagging. Think they turned out well. Also having Frank remind Juliet of the critical fact that those weren't pictures of barracuda and mahi-mahi so much as...actual fish. He needs a break from KXL anyway.

 Subject: The Underdog

Jennifer Pae

배수진 FOR OAKLAND CITY COUNCIL • DISTRICT 2 裴秀珍

Play Video

They said it couldn't be done. They said the underdog would never have a chance. They said that a 28 year old Asian-American woman wouldn't be able to win this race.

....but we've outraised our opponent. We've knocked on thousands of doors. We've called up thousands more on the phones. We have over 450 individual donors. We have hundreds of window signs all over the district. We have over a hundred volunteers making it happen.

In the next 14 days we need you to Get Out the Vote for Jennifer Pae.

We can't stress it enough - we need volunteers like you to help us get to the finish line. We have two weeks, exactly 14 days left until Election Day on November 2nd. Please sign up for a shift, sign up to host a volunteer day, sign up for our visibility team or sign up to bring food for our volunteers!

Super Volunteer of the Week:

We have three Super Volunteers of the week. This week we mailed out over a thousand letters to undecided voter in the district and we couldn't have done it without the help of Hatty Lee, Nadia Hussain and Jessica Pae! They poured blood, sweat and papercuts into getting the letters out the doors this week. Thank you!

We're Voting for Jennifer Pae Rally:

Join us for a rally to present Jennifer's broad base of supporters and key endorsements. After the rally, we are going to hit the streets and go door to door talking to voters. Coffee and breakfast will be provided. We will train you before you go out to hit the doors.

Saturday, October 23rd, Campaign Headquarters

Rally at 10:30 am. Door knocking 11am - 2:30pm

RSVP with Taz Ahmed at vote@jenniferpae.com or 510-852-9728.

Pies for Pae:

PieTISSERIE has generously donated scrumptious pies for our phone bank tomorrow night! Make calls and eat pies!

Wednesday, October 20th, Campaign Headquarters

Phone banking 5:30pm - 8:30pm. Pie party 8:30pm - 9:30pm

RSVP with Taz Ahmed at vote@jenniferpae.com or 510-852-9728.

Call-out to Asian American and Pacific Islander Voters:

District 2 has one of the largest percentage of Asian American voters in Oakland and we need your help to get the word out to them on Jennifer Pae! Join us for a bilingual phone bank to outreach to these voters. This evening is hosted by the Asian Pacific Americans for Progress \(APAP\) San Francisco Bay Area Chapter.

Tuesday, October 26th, Campaign Headquarters

Phone banking 5:30pm - 8:30.

RSVP with Taz Ahmed at vote@jenniferpae.com or 510-852-9728.

For upcoming events for next week, check out our google campaign calendar!

Virtual Volunteers:

Do you want to volunteer but can't make it into campaign headquarters? We have just the thing for you - join our virtual phone bank team! We will set you up on our sophisticated virtual phone bank system and an online training. All you need is a computer with internet to log in to our site and a phone. Virtual phone banks can be done weekdays from 5:30 - 8:30pm and 11am - 8:30pm on weekends.

A couple of volunteers have already hosted a virtual phone bank house party. You should too - get your friends together at your place, have them bring laptops and we can get you set up!

Visibility Volunteer Team:

During the next two weeks we are going to ramp up visibility in the district. Please join us in distributing window signs to voters and businesses! We need to make sure our signs are up at key intersections and key businesses. To join our visibility team, please contact Lai-San at vote@jenniferpae.com and she'll set you up.

The Shifts - Sign Up Today!!!

Saturday - Door Knocking 10am - 2pm OR 1pm - 4pm
Sunday - Door Knocking 10am - 2pm OR 1pm - 4pm
Monday - Door Knocking 5:00pm - 8:00pm
Tuesday - Phone Calling 5:30pm - 8:30pm
Wednesday - Phone Calling 5:30 - 8:30pm
Thursday - Phone Calling 5:30 - 8:30pm

Please meet promptly at our Campaign Headquarters (3231 Grand Ave.) at the start of each shift. RSVP with Taz Ahmed at vote@jenniferpae.com or at 510-852-9728.

Thank you. Together we can do this.

Sincerely,
Taz Ahmed - Campaign Director

Subject: Today's the day!

John,

It's here! Today is Sean's 48th birthday and I hope you'll join his family and all of us on his campaign staff in wishing him a very happy birthday!

We'd love it if each and every one of you wrote a personal message to Sean – thank him for his work in Congress, congratulate him on his and Randy's wedding, even poke fun at his “old age” – but if that's not your style, just take a few seconds to sign your name. I know he'll really appreciate it!

It only takes a second – click here to sign Sean's card and wish him a very happy birthday!

Sean's campaign is getting tougher and tougher – let's keep his spirits up and show him how much we support him by helping him have the best birthday ever!

Thanks for your help,

Maura

Yes Lippert, thanks the plan. We would get him to the FBO conference room early - before the press arrives - and then leave after the plane departs.

No guarantee it will remain undiscovered but we will do our best to mitigate the issue

Is there a place that is discreet like a conference room at the FBO - away from the main terminal - that would allow Gates to slide in and out relatively discreetly?

Just spoke w/ Robert Rangel. Said that PE wants to meet w/ SECDEF sometime in the bloc of 330-500pm on Monday and that we would be back in touch with more specifics concerning time and place.

He said assume that anywhere within that time works and he'll standby for more as we get it.

The one area in which he was interested was ensuring discretion. So, location was key.

Best,
Mark

Subject: Georgetown University's "RESPECT: Preventing Discrimination, Harassment, and Sexual Misconduct"

Dear Colleagues,

I am writing both to inform you of the launch of a new University-wide, mandatory online program for all faculty and staff: RESPECT: Preventing Discrimination, Harassment, and Sexual Misconduct, and to ask you to take that course.

Georgetown is committed to creating a respectful and inclusive culture. As members of the Georgetown community, we are all responsible for ensuring that everyone in our community has the opportunity to learn and work in an environment that is free from harassment, discrimination, and sexual misconduct. Recent events at colleges and universities across the nation remind us that we must all be knowledgeable about our legal responsibilities and vigilant in creating a respectful learning and work environment.

RESPECT is a new course designed to help you avoid, recognize, and report discrimination, harassment, and sexual misconduct. The course provides you with information about University resources, policies, and procedures to address and resolve such matters. It is in the interest of each one of us and in the interest of our community as a whole to take this course and understand our obligations.

The course is flexible and can be completed in as little as 30 minutes. You may take it from your desktop or laptop, either at work or at home. If you need to pause, the course will preserve your progress and you may resume at your convenience. Please note that the course cannot currently be completed on mobile devices. Completion of the course is required by the University. All faculty must complete the RESPECT program by March 20, 2015 -- to ensure compliance.

You can launch the course from your desktop or laptop. To start the course please go to: respect.georgetown.edu. You will see a short summary of the course. Click on the "Log into Respect Training" link and you will be prompted to enter your NetID and password for authentication and then you will be able to launch the course on the Work Place Answers (WPA) site and begin taking the course.

In the event you are not able to complete the course in one sitting, please close out of the course. Your place in the course will be saved, and you can resume the course where you left off by logging in again. The course takes approximately 30 minutes to complete.

Completion of the course:

Once you have completed the Mastery Test, which reinforces what you have learned, you should be able to get immediate confirmation that you have successfully completed the course:

1. Upon successful completion of the mastery test, you will be presented with a printable certificate indicating that you have completed the course. This is your primary confirmation that you have completed training.
2. For tracking purposes and if additional confirmation is needed, the following day after you have completed the course, you can go into GMS the following day to confirm completion:

Go to your profile

Select the career tab

View the certification

In the event you have difficulty launching or completing the course, please contact the Help Desk at: (202) 687-4949 or via e-mail at help@georgetown.edu .

Thank you for taking this course and for your help in ensuring that the University is a supportive and inclusive community.

Best,
Bill

He was in China with me. Don't think he has made a final call. Depends on whether we would give him something official, like California co-chair. He was prepared to fund NextGen Action and leave it to Ted and Josh to run and stay on the hard $ side. I think if we don't make a move and ask him to do something specific, he'll stay in the NextGen world.

Subject: Chelsea

What was interesting about the latest emails was how perceptive Chelsea was in her observations and suggestions. Let me suggest an idea that either of you can pass on, or not, at your discretion. I will not write about this publicly but I have been thinking about this for some time.

1) A major priority for HRC and the campaign should be an aggressive outreach to younger members of the House and Senate, and younger generation people in business and philanthropy who could come to Washington as next generation players in a potential Administration. A major generational outreach to bring new blood and fresh ideas. This should be, in principle, a core strategy of the campaign and her administration as a project for dramatic change and looking forward to the future.

2) The thought occurs that Chelsea could be an ideal person to lead this. She is of the younger generation and an ideal person to inspire and recruit others. And as a new mom she could do a lot of this work without having to travel much, even from home if she prefers.

Again, I won't write about this publicly to propose it, not my place in a column to publicly suggest this sort of thing to moms and daughters unless it happens and publicity would help. You know the Clintons in a way I do not, so I thought I would at least whisper this idea into your ears. I do think a major generational outreach for a next generation administration would be a very positive move....Brent

Subject: TODAY: Save Planned Parenthood

Dear John,

The Senate is scheduled to vote TODAY at 5:30 PM on legislation to defund Planned Parenthood nationwide.¹

Will you chip in \$15 to help support our last-minute push to fight back against anti-choice extremists and save Planned Parenthood?

A month ago, it was unthinkable that Congress would act to cut Planned Parenthood's funding. But after an all-out attack by anti-choice extremists, it could really happen.

So with hours to go before the vote to defund Planned Parenthood, we're pulling out all the stops to save it. We're flooding undecided Senators with phone calls from constituents. Our team of policy experts are all over Capitol Hill, refuting the false claims of the anti-choice extremists who are attacking Planned Parenthood.

And we're preparing to use the month-long congressional recess to hold accountable the members of Congress who vote the wrong way. Will you make a donation to help support our work and this crucial fight?

Yes, I'll chip in \$15 to defend abortion rights and help save Planned Parenthood.

Today's vote is just the beginning of a wave of attacks on Planned Parenthood. Some members of Congress are already talking about a possible government shutdown to defund Planned Parenthood.²

We've also gotten reports of defund Planned Parenthood efforts moving forward in as many as 20 states.³

Planned Parenthood is one of the most important providers of reproductive health care in America. They're facing a coordinated attack that our opponents spent years preparing. It will take an all-hands-on-deck effort to fight back and win.

Will you chip in \$15?

Thank you for helping to make reproductive freedom real for all women.

John-

I spoke with Bachar. You can stay at our place tonight. We have a guest bedroom in the basement with own bathroom/kitchen. I can also run you to the airport in the morning.

We are at 2385 S. Clayton Street, Denver. It's near the University of Denver.

And if you want, we can go for a quick run in the morning too...up to you.

What time roughly, do you think you will get there? (I have a dinner to go to tonight, ironically with Tom Vilsack, but should be home by 8:45).

"I promise you," John McCain told me today, "only the veteran appreciates how terrible war is, because of the horrible loss of comrades and the carnage that ensues. I will be keenly aware of the horrors of war before I send our nation into one." Of course we're already at war, and McCain, who just returned from another trip to Iraq to see how things are progressing, spoke to me by phone from the road in South Carolina:

Subject: Closing the floodgates

Dear John,

Last year, the Tea Party spent $2.9 million in special interest money trying to defeat me.

$2,900,000! That's a lot of zeros.

The reason those groups could spend so much attacking me is simple: Citizens United.

Since the Supreme Court opened the floodgates, shadowy groups have spent hundreds of millions of dollars trying to buy our elections, and they're going to keep spending. But if Congress acts, we could fix it.

I need your help – now – to call on Congress to take election power from corporations and give it back to the people.

Add your name and demand Congress overturn Citizens United and give elections back to the people.

I know that campaign finance laws aren't that exciting. But when these laws let corporations drown out the voices of people like you, we need to act. We simply can't allow unlimited, secret contributions to flood our airwaves with negative, untrue ads.

It's an election year, and that means the stakes are high – we need you to add your voice now to ensure that shadowy corporations don't buy this year's elections.

Thanks for helping,

Sean

Thanks, Jim, for getting to me yourself. If implemented, your proposal will be a great help to us. Dr. Moses Massaquoi, the head of the Clinton Foundation in the Ministry of Health & Social Welfare here in Liberia, is actively involved with the management of the Ebola incidence and heads the "case management (treatment)" team. I will pass your suggestions to him and Hon. Tolbert Nyenswah, the Chair of the "Ebola Incidence Management System" and get back to you very soon.

Jacob-please help us get this message to Dr Gwenigale-thanks

Walter,
Denise Walsh and I have a plan we would like to propose to help the MOH deal with the ebola crisis.

(1) Bring in healthcare staff for 30 day periods- the stress and the ability to only wear personal protective equipment for short periods of time due to the heat wears down people very quickly and leads to errors in judgment and clinical decision-making. We would limit each team to 30 days- fresh legs, fresh minds and limited exposure to protect the teams will produce positive outcomes. Mandatory inservice prior to coming would be required and the CDC has a training program for volunteers starting this month.

(2) Develop a "par level" of supplies, equip, including food and water for patients and staff, all necessary equip required to treat the patients in order to ensure that each facility has the necessary supplies. We propose to also provide oversight of this supply chain. We would work closely with the MOH to oversee the distribution of those supplies and assure they meet the determined par levels.

(3) We propose to have an agreement with the MOH that we would work in concert with the MOH to ensure the distribution of medical teams and supplies coming into the country. We are proposing to work in partnership with the MOH regarding the ebola problem which for example would allow the MOH to focus on rebuilding the health system, getting staff back to work and treating the other patients in the country while we focused on ebola.

(4) We are proposing to have a sponsor- Clinton Foundation- which would help secure the partners needed and that has a proven track record in Liberia. We have had preliminary contact with the Clinton Foundation who think this is a good plan but want the plan to be approved by you as a co-operative effort between the Foundation and the MOH.

(5) I have also had several discussions with the CDC who also is in support of this plan.

(6) Another aspect in which we could be helpful is the coordination of the various organizations (CDC, UN, WHO, etc) working in the country with the MOH.

We are looking to help and are open to suggestions and advice as you know the situation better than we do. We would welcome further discussion, elaboration and refinement of this plan or alternatives in order to be able to be of service to you and the MOH.

Thank you for your consideration and we wish you all the best in these difficult times.

Regards.
Jim Tomarken

Rough Transcript

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: we just heard from secretary clinton. we're joined now by senator Bernie Sanders. thank you for joining us again this morning. senator Sanders, covered a lot of ground with secretary clinton. let's go over some of the issues yesterday with you. the back and forth yesterday whether that super pac was going to demand the release of your health records. secretary clinton has released all of her records, will you?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: absolutely, of course, i mean, i think she released a two-page statement on her health records. we'll do the same.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: she welcomes your support of the gun liability. called it a flip flop. time now for you to closing this charleston loophole, will you?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: well, first of all, george, as you know, i have a d-minus voting record from the nra, in 1988 i probably lost an election because i was the only candidate who said we should ban assault weapons. what i said months and months ago was, there were things in the liability bill that i liked and didn't like, wanted to take a look at this bill, now that's going to be introduced to review it and make changes to it. i think the bill makes a lot of sense. what we will do is supportive of this legislation, there's an amendment, though, that i want to see is incorporated that's noncontroversial that monitors the impact of small gun shops in rural america. bottom line is, when a gun shop sells a gun legally to someone and then something bad happens i don't think it --

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: the three-day waiting, the person gets the gun after three days of waiting no matter.

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: we'll take a look at that as well. the issue is, my view has always been and most important is that we have a strong instant background check, i have supported that from day one. i want to see that expanded and improved. look at the end of the day, what every american understands we need to keep the guns out of hands of people shouldn't have guns.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: on health care, you shouldn't tear apart obama care. people should be defending the affordable care act. so, how high will the top tax rate go to pay for it, when will those details be out.

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: very shortly. here 's the point, Bernie is going to dismember health care in the united states of the america, he's going to do -- millions of people will no longer have the insurance they have, that's nonsense. what everybody understands, a medicare for all program is guaranteeing health care to all people. we still have 29 billion americans who still don't have health care. we spend far, far more per capita on health care than other countries. i want to fulfill the vision of people like harry truman and say health care is the right of allep people. i hope secretary clinton would join me on that saying that and tell the pharmaceutical industry they can't continue to rip off the american people and charge us the highest prices in the world.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: isn't it fair for voters in iowa to know now you're going to pay for it?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: you know what, george, i mean, sometimes, the discussion becomes really absurd is that, we'll increase medicare premiums that is true, but we are doing away with all private health insurance premiums and sometimes, it disappoints me that the clinton campaign is sounding like republicans. the truth of the matter is, we spend far more per person on health care than other countries. i want to fulfill the vision of people like harry truman and say health care is the right of allep people. i hope secretary clinton would join me on that saying that and tell the pharmaceutical industry they can't continue to rip off the american people and charge us the highest prices in the world.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: isn't it fair for voters in iowa to know now you're going to pay for it?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: you know what, george, i mean, sometimes, the discussion becomes really absurd is that, we'll increase medicare premiums that is true, but we are doing away with all private health insurance premiums and sometimes, it disappoints me that the clinton campaign is sounding like republicans. the truth of the matter is, we spend far more per person on health care and second of all, medicare for all, single-payer system, it would lower the cost of health insurance for the middle class of this country. so, to say yes there will be medicare premiums, yeah, of course there will be, it's not free.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: don't voters have a right to those details before they vote? shouldn't this come out before the iowa caucuses?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: the answer is yes and they will. the answer is bottom line is, yes, and they will.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: secretary clinton's campaign has been making the point of leblgtability. karl rove's campaign is now running an ad against her. in a campaign past positions are going to get scrutiny hp how do you respond about ads circulating about your past positions? you urged congressmen to give serious thought the nationalization of the oil industry. Sanders said, all yutties must be under public ownership.

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: that was a long, long time ago, before i ever was elected to anything. i was mayor of burlington. people can go back and look at the fact that hillary clinton was i understand it was a supporter of barry goldwater. who cares that's a long time ago.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: i was going to ask, what was your thinking then and what changed your mind?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: what i said 40 years ago is less important. you talk about electability. if you look at all of the polls -- almost all of the polls out there today, today, what you find is Bernie Sanders defeats donald trump by a much larger margin than does hillary clinton in the last national poll, we beat trump by 13 points. if you look at the battle ground states in new hampshire and iowa, we beat them. our appeal is not only to democrats, young people, working-class people but to independents as well. if you're concerned or if the american people are concerned about which candidate has the best opportunity to defeat right-wing republicans i think you're looking at him, Bernie Sanders.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: those positions you completely disavow them?

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: you know, george, i have been unelected official for 25 years. yes, those positions are what were before i assumed any office. i have a record of eight years as major of the city of burlington. and in the senate. i'm very proud of that record. going back 40, 50 years, that's fine. i don't think people give much kreecredence to that.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: thank you.

SEN. BERNIE SANDERS: thank you.

Dear John,

During last week's gubernatorial debate, Governor Branstad attempted to dismiss the severity of the historic 2008 floods in communities like Cedar Rapids, Cedar Falls, Davenport, Oakville, and Coralville by comparing it to just one of the many severe weather events in Iowa each year. Dear Law Center Community Members:

The IST department successfully completed 7 switch upgrades in McDonough on Wednesday, August 12, 2015. The remaining 5 switches, located in EBW and Hotung, will be upgraded on Sunday, August 16, 2015 between 8:00 AM and 2:00 PM. As noted in our 8/12/15 notification, each switch will take approximately 15 to 60 minutes to upgrade. End users will experience an interruption in network and telephone service for approximately 15 to 60 minutes as each switch is upgraded. Connectivity to University systems from off-campus locations will not be impacted.

UPDATED UPGRADE SCHEDULE:

Date	Time	Location	Expected Outage
Initial Outage Window COMPLETED on Wednesday, August 12, 2015	6:00 PM – 12:00 AM	MCD 1 st floor (2 switches) MCD 2 nd floor MCD 3 rd floor (2 switches) MCD 4 th floor MCD 5 th floor	15 to 60 minutes per switch
Backup Outage Window Sunday, August 16, 2015	8:00 AM – 2:00 PM	EBW 1 st floor (2 switches) Hotung 1 st floor Hotung 3 rd floor Hotung 5 th floor	15 to 60 minutes per switch

If you have any questions or concerns regarding this outage, please contact the Service Desk at help@law.georgetown.edu or 202-662-9284.

Once again, thank you for your patience as we work to improve the quality of our technology services at the Law Center.

Subject: Notification of Network and Telephone Service Outage on August 12, 2015

Dear Law Center Community Members:

The IST department is performing upgrades to 12 Cisco network switches across the Law Center campus. These upgrades will take place this evening beginning at 6:00pm until approximately 12:00am. Replacement of the switches will affect wired and wireless access to the network (Wi-Fi connectivity will vary depending on the location of the end user and their proximity to an active access point) as well as access to telephone service (which relies on the switch for power and network connectivity).

The following Law Center locations will be affected:

Date	Time	Location	Expected Outage
Initial Outage Window Wednesday, August 12, 2015	6:00 PM – 12:00 AM	MCD 1 st floor (2 switches) MCD 2 nd floor MCD 3 rd floor (2 switches) MCD 4 th floor MCD 5 th floor EBW 1 st floor (2 switches) Hotung 1 st floor Hotung 3 rd floor Hotung 5 th floor	15 to 60 minutes per switch
Backup Outage Window Sunday, August 16, 2015	8:00 AM – 2:00 PM	Locations TBD after initial outage	15 to 60 minutes per switch

The 12 network switches will be upgraded in the order listed above. Each switch will take approximately 15 to 60 minutes to upgrade. End users will experience an interruption in network and telephone service for approximately 15 to 60 minutes as each switch is upgraded. If we are unable to replace all 12 switches within the initial 6-hour outage window, we will schedule a 2nd outage window on Sunday, Aug 16th beginning at 8:00am and ending no later than 2:00pm.

If you have any questions or concerns regarding this outage, please contact the Service Desk at help@law.georgetown.edu or 202-662-9284.

Thank you for your patience as we improve the quality of our services.

[Subtitle:] Many GOPers continue the self-deception—she's not running. Here's a whiff of reality from a Republican. She's running, and she's formidable.

Over the last two years I have engaged in countless discussions with Republican friends and colleagues about whether Hillary Clinton would run for president in 2016. What I discovered were two distinct schools of thought: Republicans who were hopeful that she would not run, and Republicans who were confident that she would not run.

Both camps believed that Clinton would bow out or not win her party's nomination for one or more of the following reasons:

She has secret health problems.

She is too old and unattractive.

An "unknown" Democrat would rise up and defeat her for the nomination, a la 2008.

Her priorities will change once she becomes a grandmother.

Benghazi revelations will take her down.

As someone who since early 2013 was confident that Clinton would run for president in 2016, I believed that the “Clinton deniers” among my fellow Republicans were engaging in the political equivalent of sticking their heads in the sand.

Now, because of five news items that have unfolded during this month of September, Republican deniers must face the fact that not only is Clinton running, but that she will be a formidable opponent against any of the current potential GOP candidates. This, despite her many flaws and heavy baggage.

Here are September’s five important pieces of Hillary news that fit together like a puzzle—and the last two, without political precedent.

First, on September 5, in a speech at a charity event in Mexico, Clinton stated that she will announce her presidential intentions “after the first of the year.”

Why would a presidential candidate mention a specific time frame five months away unless the news was extremely positive for her supporters?

Second, on September 14, Hillary Clinton teased and winked-winked her way through retiring Iowa Senator Tom Harkin’s annual steak fry saying, “Hello Iowa. I’m back!” Just those four words unleashed thousands of headlines like this one from the AP, “Hillary Clinton in Iowa Stirs 2016 Speculation.”

Third, the ever-shy potential “First Dude,” speaking at this same Iowa steak fry, sung the praises of Ready for Hillary, his wife’s “campaign-in-waiting,” which was out in force. “Amazing. They are amazing,” said the former president. “You know I saw some of them here. I think with the rules we’re not supposed to have any contact with them. They’re like Energizer Bunnies. They’re just everywhere.”

Yes, the Ready for Hillary PAC will soon be everywhere—in fact, working in every state where there is a key Senate race in the upcoming midterm election. This is number four on my list, and it is politically groundbreaking. Never in the history of American politics has an organization with an unannounced presidential candidate tried to influence the outcome of an election in the name of that candidate.

Ready for Hillary communications director Seth Bringman announced that starting on October 1, his political staff will plant itself in 14 states. A September 17 email to reporters stated the following: “This staff deployment is part of Ready for Hillary’s continued commitment to channeling the enthusiasm for a potential Hillary campaign into helping Democrats on the ballot this year.”

Think of it this way: Ready for Hillary is collecting political IOU’s for its leader, who can never publicly acknowledge the group’s existence.

The fifth, final, and most spectacular September development on the road to Clinton’s January presidential announcement is another historical political milestone and a precursor to how a Hillary 2016 campaign will sound.

In order to defend Clinton against any damaging revelations that may emerge from the select House committee on Benghazi, no fewer than three Democrat groups are ready to pounce. On September 16, Politico reported that a new pro-Clinton group called Correct the Record will work with Democratic researchers and establish a web site that “is designed like a news site and will issue detailed, rapid responses to charges against Clinton — mimicking the way a campaign would defend a candidate in real time during a presidential debate.”

Meanwhile, the GOP is fractured, leaderless, and still about 19 months away from the emergence of its 2016 standard bearer – regardless whether Republicans win back the Senate in November. Take one look at the Real Clear Politics 2016 Republican presidential nomination poll averages. It gives new meaning to the words fractured and leaderless.

Then, if you are a Republican with a strong stomach, check out RCP’s 2016 general election match-ups, with Clinton defeating every likely GOP presidential candidate by wide margins.

All the evidence suggests that Clinton is on her way to becoming the great social movement I warned and wrote about back in January 2013 and why I predicted her 2016 victory back in August 2013.

Americans may not want a coronation in 2016 but the assembling of the infrastructure to elect America's first female president is well underway and from a Republican point of view looks unstoppable.

If you think of her in retail terms, Hillary is Costco, Wal-Mart, and Home Depot all rolled into one mega-mega-mega-store. Meanwhile, the GOP's 2016 candidates are small specialty boutiques in a suburban, red-state shopping mall.

In anticipation of 2016 the GOP had better consolidate its goods and reinvent its brand. It also has to dump the Hillary deniers, because at this point, denying her candidacy is counterproductive to formulating a coherent strategy. _After all that, the party can go to market with a product that is acceptable to the masses.

If not, on November 8, 2016, the GOP will be out of the White House business for years to come.

Before she collects that $225,000 fee next month or speaking to the UNLV Foundation, Hillary Clinton will headline a fundraiser for the state Democratic Party, with a fraction of the proceeds going to Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid's re-election fund.

The event will take place before Clinton's speech and a yet-to-be disclosed location and will cost donors $10,000 for a VIP ticket ($15,000 for couples) and $1,000 if you just want to go to the reception.

The event is for a joint fundraising entity called the Reid Nevada Fund, with most of the proceeds, as you can see below, going to the state party.

This will be a nice infusion -- I can smell high six figures here -- going into Election Day.

NEW YORK – The theme of the workfest known as the Clinton Global Initiative was “reimagining impact.”

It might as well have been called: “Chelsea’s having a baby.”

The daughter of the former and – possibly – future president of the U.S. was a very pregnant looking fixture at the conference, prompting guest speaker Barack Obama to offer up his presidential motorcade in case she went into labor right there in the ballroom of the Sheraton in midtown Manhattan.

That didn’t happen. But the baby seemed on everyone’s mind.

In panel discussions, moderators invariably asked Bill and Hillary Clinton about their new role as first-time grandparents.

At one point Chelsea Clinton drew the baby into a discussion of the plight of the African elephant, worrying that her first child could “grow up in a world without elephants.”

CNN’s Erin Burnett, in an interview with Mr. Clinton on Wednesday, asked him if would need to “baby-proof” the White House – a question that had the added bonus of teasing out whether his wife indeed plans to run in 2016.

Mr. Clinton gave away nothing: He said he was merely interested in becoming a grandfather.

“One thing at a time,” he said.

CNN then played a video feed of actor Matt Damon asking Mr. Clinton a question about clean water and sanitation. But Mr. Damon couldn’t resist.

“Are you excited to be a grandfather?”

Mr. Clinton made clear he’s been thinking about the baby’s arrival. (In a separate interview, he suggested the baby could come by Oct. 1.)

Are you excited?” Ms. Burnett asked the 42nd president.

“I’m out of control,” said Mr. Clinton.

He’s been giving himself advice on how best to play his part.

“Every day I get up and I say: you have to remember whose child this is,” Mr. Clinton continued. “Do not interfere! Be there when you’re welcome. Be loving, but not judgmental.”

NEW YORK – Take a workmanlike pro basketball player and stick him next to LeBron James and the contrast will be glaring. One makes jump shots; the other dazzles with thunderous dunks.

All these years after leaving office, Bill Clinton remains the LeBron of American politics – a reality that creates a potential pitfall for Hillary Clinton and her likely presidential campaign.

Watching the two on stage this week at the Clinton Global Initiative's annual conference drove home the point. The former president is the natural politician of the family; Mrs. Clinton the natural policy wonk. His speeches sound conversational, improvised. Hers sound scripted. He looks like he's having fun; she looks like she's working.

There was a revealing moment Sunday night when Mr. Clinton, perhaps not realizing a microphone was on, approached a drummer who had just performed in the Sheraton ballroom and gushed over "the riff you just did." The amateur sax player was relishing the moment, admiring the skills of an accomplished musician.

Both worked the conference hard over three days, discussing efforts to fight Ebola, expand the supply of clean drinking water and preserve endangered wildlife.

In one instance each used a personal story to make a point. Speaking to CNN, Mr. Clinton got a question about NFL football player Ray Rice's assault on his then-fiancée in an elevator. Mr. Clinton, as a boy growing up in Arkansas, had his own brush with domestic abuse, stepping in to warn his stepfather not to hit his mother and half-brother.

He paused a beat, causing the audience to lean in and listen more intently. "I know a lot about this subject," Mr. Clinton said. "I grew up in a home with domestic violence. And God I hope that it works out alright. I hope he really is OK and he never does it again."

Mrs. Clinton, in a separate panel, talked about her mother Dorothy Rodham, whose divorced parents sent her to California at age eight to live with unloving grandparents.

"My own mother faced a lot of very difficult challenges and her resilience coming out of an abusive and neglectful childhood made such a big impression on me," Mrs. Clinton said. Knowing what her mother endured helped convince her there must be "more attention paid to how we help our youngest children get off to the best start."

In Mr. Clinton's answer, one feels the pain of family wounds; in Mrs. Clinton's, a prescription for better policy.

The test for a future Clinton campaign is not to have the former two-term president overshadow his wife on the trail. He tends to steal the show.

Not that Mr. Clinton is always in top form. In the 2008 race, he caused problems for his wife's campaign by veering off message at times. Mrs. Clinton is more disciplined and seldom makes news not of her choosing.

Times are different now, and some advisers to Mrs. Clinton believe her seriousness can work to her advantage. In 2008, voters rejected Mrs. Clinton in favor of the more likable and charismatic candidate, Barack Obama. Six years later, Mr. Obama's approval ratings have tanked and many of his supporters are annoyed that large pieces of his agenda have stalled. The prison at Guantanamo is still open; America's roads and bridges are still in disrepair; wages are still stagnant.

In this environment, voters might be more open to a serious-minded candidate who perhaps stands a better chance translating campaign promises into law.

That's the thinking. In any case, it may be the Democrats' best hope. Bill Clinton can't run again and Mr. Obama is lame duck. There's no LeBron James in the Democratic field.

Even the Hillary haters would have to agree that she's good for one thing: getting voters to see that women can play at the highest level of government. No matter what they think about her handling of Benghazi, Clinton's visibility is a plus in a land where a measly one out of five pols roaming the halls of Congress is female.

Whether she runs for president or not (and, of course she's running), Clinton's supposed fictional depiction in the new CBS drama, "Madam Secretary," about the exploits of a newly minted secretary of State and mom of two, will most likely help all female politicians — not just the former New York senator and her Democratic counterparts — by raising awareness that hey, women can really do this stuff. (Unless, of course, you're Shenna Bellows fighting a rare female vs. female Senate race in Maine, where incumbent Republican Susan Collins is killing it.)

Research shows that strong, highly functioning female characters serve as role models and change public perceptions of what women can accomplish. By watching shows about female politicians, voters more easily imagine a government run by women. And, the more our daughters see images of women leading our country, the more they believe that they can hold any elective office in the land.

So the fact that the reviews for the Morgan Freeman-backed series (Sundays at 8:30pm EDT on CBS) glisten with praise: "riveting," "splendid," "entertaining" and "ably led by Tea Leoni," is positive news for all women who strive to make the world a better place, no matter what their politics.

Still don't believe it?

Let's talk to a card-carrying Mensa actress. Academy Award-winner Geena Davis, who played a female president on ABC's "Commander in Chief" series, advocates seeing more positive media images of powerful women as a way to change our male-dominated culture. Davis, 58, is known for (among other things) her role as Thelma in the girl-power film "Thelma and Louise." She's a former nationally ranked archer, and founder of the nonprofit Geena Davis Institute on Gender in Media. At her institute's recent conference in Washington, she quoted a poll taken during the "Commander" that series found 68 percent of people who were familiar with the drama were more likely to vote for women.

"That's why media images are so powerful," Davis tells me. "Life imitates art."

Megan Beyer, director of external affairs for EDGE Strategies, a Switzerland-based company that verifies that females are in leadership pipeline at companies — believes "it's the time for women" to penetrate the top spots in all industries.

But whether or not that's true, and whether positive TV and film images move the dial, there is still a paucity of female players interested in the real-life political terrain — and it's a treacherous path once elected. The female pols who get voted in to click their heels on the marble halls of the Capitol are more likely to trade their Manolos for wing tips the higher they climb the political ladder, says Abigail Disney, a television producer who spoke at the Institute on Gender in Media. "Female politicians who get to the top have to act more like men."

Just ask New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D), who was told by a male colleague not to "lose too much weight" because "I like my girls chubby." Gillibrand exposed her battles with sexism on Capitol Hill in her recently released book, Off the Sidelines. Yet she decided not to name names saying, "It's less important who they are than what they said." (The New York Times later reported that this offender is the late Sen. Daniel Inouye [D-Hawaii], which Gillibrand will not verify.)

Female lawmakers "have to calibrate how open — as a powerful woman — they can be," says Jill Dougherty, a former CNN correspondent who covered the White House and State Department and is now a public policy scholar at the Wilson Center. She notes that some women on Capitol Hill buck that trend and "get together socially to work up a platform or an idea" that crosses party lines, a rarity today among their male counterparts.

As a media critic, I'll go out on a limb and say that women have a long way to go both on screen and off. The depictions of women in "Real Housewives" — of any city — are proof of that. And we don't need to read the 2011 Davis Institute-funded study to know that there's far more female T&A than political prowess on TV.

While Carrie Mathison, the CIA operative in "Homeland" played by Claire Danes, and Olivia Pope, the D.C. fixer in "Scandal" played by Kerry Washington, have burst onto the scene since then, it's simply not enough.

Until we have a real female commander-in-chief — whether Hillary Clinton or a female GOP contender like South Carolina's Nikki Haley or New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez, whom Ann Romney recently said she would "love to see" run, we'll have to settle for fictional forerunners to fight our battles.

[Subtitle:] Hillary Clinton, the Clinton Global Initiative, and our supine media

Amy Chozick covers Hillary Clinton for the New York Times. She is an enterprising and dedicated reporter, and many of her stories have annoyed the 2016 presidential frontrunner. This week Chozick covered a meeting of the Clinton Global Initiative. It was her turn to be annoyed.

Chozick's most revealing article about the event had nothing to do with the scheduled agenda, or with the opaque, labyrinthine, and seedy finances of the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation, or with the tsunami of clichés from the stage about global warming, gender equality, wellness, empowerment, polarization, Mohammed Yunus, sustainable development, globalization, Palm Oil alternatives, uplift, board diversity, education access, green energy, Malala, information technology, organic farming, public-private partnerships, and #YesAllWomen. The article had to do with Chozick's bathroom habits.

Every time she felt the urge, a representative of the Clintons would accompany her to the ladies' room. Every time. And not only would the "friendly 20-something press aide" stroll with Chozick to the entrance of the john. She also "waited outside the stall." As though Chozick were a little girl.

If it was not embarrassing enough to be chaperoned to the water closet by a recent college graduate no doubt beaming with righteousness and an entirely undeserved and illusory sense of self-importance, some earnest and vacant and desperate-to-be-hip Millennial whose affiliation with the Clintons, whose involvement in their various schemes, consists of nothing more than her uniform of white shirt and silk scarf—if this was not on its own an indignity and an insult for a correspondent of the New York Times, when Chozick asked for comment on the bathroom police, she received the following response:

Craig Minassian, a spokesman for the initiative, directed me to a press release about American Standard's Flush for Good campaign to improve sanitation for three million people in the developing world. 'Since you are so interested in bathrooms and CGI,' Mr. Minassian said.

Forms of civility, etiquette, and protocol bind Chozick in her dealings with the men and women who work for the subjects of her beat. They do not bind me. And so let me say on behalf of Ms. Chozick, and on behalf of all the other reporters who have been “escorted” to and fro toilets across America so that not for a moment do they escape the scouring eyes of Bill and Hillary Clinton, that Craig Minassian can stick his big obnoxious head in the toilet and Flush for Good.

I am tired of the double game the Clintons have been playing since last year, when Hillary left the Obama administration and began plotting her 2016 campaign: the passive-aggressive, push-pull tactic of complaining about and condemning supposedly harsh media coverage even as she and her husband and their minions use access and connections to advance their preferred narratives, bullying reporters and outlets who do not conform, and responding to press inquiries with snark and insults and flip and mendacious retorts.

What is more I am tired of the mainstream media’s complicity in the manipulation and goaltending, the manner in which reporters for establishment outlets accept the Clintons’ absurd regulations and spin, for reasons that are baffling and mysterious to me: whether it is out of ideological or partisan bias, or journalistic self-interest, or the calculation that one day bills will have to be paid, the scribbling will have to end, and jobs in the White House or at SKDKnickerbocker will have to be obtained.

There was no mass protest over the despotic rules at the Clinton Global Initiative. Chozick’s complaint did not become a rallying cry for press freedom. No major institution threatened not to cover next year’s meeting. Marty Baron, the executive editor of the Washington Post, tweeted a quote from one of his writers, Chris Cillizza, who said the Clintons “have as dim a view of the political press as any modern politician.” Perhaps that view is justified. Look at how easily the Clintons overpower “the political press.” Look at the Anaconda Vise in which they hold the mainstream media.

Did the metro dailies use this week’s conference to follow up on Chozick’s reporting from last year on the conflicts of interest and ethical dilemmas and outrageous spending at CGI and the Clinton Foundation? To reexamine Alec Macgillis’s long 2013 profile of Bill Clinton’s protégé Doug Band, whose consultancy is mixed-up in the foundation’s and the initiative’s partnerships and sponsorships and commitments? To conduct even the most mundane inquiry into whether there is anything left to reveal about Hillary Clinton’s past?

Let’s see. “At Clintons’ 3-Day event, Hillary basks in a candidate’s dream setting,” read the headline in the Los Angeles Times. “Clinton world braces for big news on baby front,” read the headline in the Wall Street Journal. “Clinton wonk party outshines U.N. meeting,” read the headline in the Washington Post. USA Today ran items on the pledge that soda companies made at the event to cut calories by 20 percent in 10 years, on Hillary Clinton’s backing of President Obama’s Syria policy, and on Bill Clinton’s truism that the country has become more tolerant of racial and sexual minorities. The Times ran an article on the soda spiel too.

Meanwhile, for the fourth time this year, Alana Goodman of the Washington Free Beacon broke news about the former first lady who everyone seems to believe has been thoroughly vetted: In this case, Goodman unveiled Hillary Clinton’s previously unpublished correspondence with radical activist Saul Alinsky. The exchange of letters is a fascinating glimpse of Clinton’s relationship with one of the central figures of the New Left, the author of Rules for Radicals and the theorist behind community organizing about whom Clinton wrote her college thesis. Goodman’s piece is both a scoop and a worthwhile read, on the most basic level to see how Clinton kissed up to Alinsky, calling his work “revelation,” and on another level to compare the youthful Hillary against her later incarnations as rapist defense lawyer, cattle futures trader, land speculator, failed health care reformer, victim of infidelity, junior senator, failed presidential candidate, secretary of State, blood clot victim, and motivational speaker.

For the fourth time in 2014, Alana Goodman has scooped the combined resources of the largest media companies in America. And for the fourth time in 2014, the media has reacted bizarrely and schizophrenically to her reporting. Actual, real-life, news-obsessed journalists said, oh, here is an interesting aspect of her majesty’s biography that hitherto has been ignored. And liberal hacks wrote blog posts that implicitly recognized our story of being worthy of a response even as they reassured their blinkered and complacent audiences that there was nothing to worry about, no news here, just a bunch of crazy Likudnik nepotists cracking wise in the frat house.

Neither the legitimate journalists nor the partisan bloggers recognize the true import of Goodman’s reporting: That the mainstream media is fundamentally lazy and horrible at their jobs. Here you have all of these interesting things about Hillary Clinton just sitting in archives across the country for years, and no one has bothered to look at them because liberals cannot apply the “objectivity” through which they cover Charles Koch and Dick Cheney to people like Tom Steyer and Hillary Clinton. Instead they have to wait until the alternative media forces the issue, whether the issue is Van Jones, or Steyer’s coal investments, or Hillary’s past, or the IRS scandal, or Benghazi, or the Dave Brat challenge to Eric Cantor. In each instance the mainstream media roll their eyes and mutter under their breath as they report the news in which everyone is interested but them. They impugn and mock and dismiss and marginalize conservative media when what they should be doing is thanking us for doing their work.

I am not entirely without sympathy. Mainstream journalists are under pressures that we are not. They have to pretend for example that David Brock is a serious person. They are implicated in the liberal Democratic project through family or sympathy or ambition. They have to take angry calls from the White House and congressional Democrats and candidates. One of Alana Goodman’s scoops involved a meeting at the D.C. bureau of the New York Times at which Hillary Clinton’s top lieutenants complained about the paper’s coverage of their boss, saying it was too intrusive and critical and that Clinton is not a public figure but an expectant grandmother. Leave Hillary alone, she’s under a lot of stress right now, she still has to wear those glasses at night, we have long memories, all she wants to do is swim, she hasn’t made up her mind about 2016, she’s putting the finishing touches on her book, dinner last Saturday was a lot of fun we should do it again sometime, she's really a private person and doesn't like all of this attention, why do you have to be so mean to her, I'm not going to write that recommendation letter for Sidwell Friends, Chelsea's afraid the bad press may affect the baby, yes I'll be at Hilary Rosen's on Friday, we are totally uninteresting and unaffected and blameless and prosaic and apolitical but cross us and we'll cut your f—ing knees off ... Could you have been at that meeting and not laughed?

It will be the unabashedly ideological media that provides the best coverage of the corporatist "centrist" stalking her way back to power. And not just the conservative media: There is plenty of sublimated progressive grumbling at, and critical reporting of, the Hillary juggernaut. Alex Seitz-Wald of MSNBC wrote a fair-minded piece, "The agony and the ecstasy of the Clintons at CGI," that was a much clearer analysis of the event than any in the major papers. Seitz-Wald went so far as to mention the "elitism problem" and "Wall Street problem" that dog the Clintons, whose idea of combating income inequality is to talk about it while vacationing in a multimillion dollar mansion in the Hamptons, then rub their chins at lavish uplit plenary sessions with Hollywood celebrities and foreign leaders and the head of Goldman Sachs.

In the coverage of the Clintons this week you saw in microcosm the future of political journalism: aggressive ideological reporting will be on the margins but will score the hits. And the mainstream media will be on the inside, credentialed and "legitimate," their cherubic handlers marching them willingly to marble-tiled hotel bathrooms—hapless prisoners of the golden bowl.

Associated Press: "Woman Guilty Of Trespass In Clinton Shoe Incident"

By Ken Ritter

September 25, 2014, 6:19 p.m. EDT

A Phoenix woman who was accused of throwing a shoe at Hillary Clinton while the former U.S. secretary of state addressed a Las Vegas audience in April pleaded guilty to trespassing, but is fighting a charge of violence against a person in a restricted building.

A spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney Daniel Bogden said Thursday that 36-year-old Alison Michelle Ernst is due for a jury trial Oct. 29 in U.S. District Court on the violence charge.

U.S. District Magistrate Judge George Foley Jr. on Monday ruled Ernst fit for trial after reviewing results of a psychological exam sought by her lawyer, William Carrico, an assistant federal public defender.

Carrico was out of the office Thursday and unavailable for comment.

Both charges are misdemeanors. Ernst faces up to a year in prison and a $100,000 fine on each.

Clinton, a former first lady and Democratic senator from New York, was speaking on stage April 10 at the Mandalay Bay resort to a recycling industry conference when Ernst threw a soccer shoe past her.

Clinton flinched and ducked but wasn't struck. She continued her speech.

Ernst surrendered to security guards who escorted her out of the ballroom to a sofa in a hallway where she told an Associated Press reporter she threw a shoe and dropped some papers. Ernst didn't identify herself or explain her action before security officers ushered reporters and photographers away.

Authorities said Ernst wasn't a credentialed conference attendee and wasn't supposed to have been in the ballroom, which had more than 1,000 people.

The shoe-throwing incident reminded some of former President George W. Bush dodging shoes thrown by an Iraqi journalist during a Baghdad news conference in December 2008. Shoe-throwing is considered an insult in Arab cultures.

Preference for us would be to come meet her and film the interview but could also just do over phone.

Would have Tara Culp-Ressler do the interview, she covers all our women's health stuff and is very smart.

Could limit just to Planned Parenthood/Shutdown or do it mostly on that and include a couple of other topics that could be buzzy online. Criminal justice and guns are two things that come to mind.

Let me know what we should do to move it forward. I know that the shutdown thing is coming soon.

Well, John, that is quite a look! Fabulous, I think is what they would say. It was nice to see you at the CAP event last week. Don't know if you have any time for a quick touch base, but if so I would love to catch up. I told Robby last week that we are all helping to build a tight little snow ball, and as it rolls down the mountain, it will become a HUGE snowball. It's just a small snowball now. I know it taking a bit to get folks excited – I can see it in our members here. But it will come. As you think about the June 13 speech, I encourage you all to think big. A big idea or two could really drive this train for a while. The policy roll-outs have been good – now it's time for the speech on what our country will be. She will be great. Please let me know if I can be helpful. I know you get all this unsolicited advice all the time, so feel free to throw it in the trash. But I would like to buy you a cup of coffee when you are in DC. Be well and safe travels – and again, nice look! --Stephanie

Subject: My birthday party

Dear John,

I hope you had a wonderful Thanksgiving. This year, my aunt and uncle cooked in Albany, and Theo and Henry had a great time playing with their cousins.

I am writing to ask for your help with our last big (and fun) event for the year - my birthday party! (I'll be 43, but who's counting). My great friend, Attorney General Andrew Cuomo, is coming as well to help me celebrate! We're having an evening cocktail party on Saturday, December 12th at 6:00pm in NYC downtown. Details are below.

As many of you have heard, the Republican National Committee is doing its best to recruit the strongest possible opponent and have been courting both Rudy Giuliani and George Pataki. With their 100% name recognition, I will need your help now more ever to show our strength. The total fundraising numbers we post at the end of the year will be the numbers they see before making their decision about whether to run. Please consider giving your personal maximum by December 31 (the maximum federal amount is $4800 per person), and come to whatever events make sense for you over the next year. By giving generously now, we will show our opponents that we are ready for this fight.

Thank you for all that you have done over the years; your support and friendship have meant so much to me. As we enter now into the toughest stretch of the campaign, your help can really make all the difference. Please contact Ross Offinger at 718-344-8025, or ross@kirstengillibrand.com if you can help.

Warmly,
Kirsten

Dear Herb, Susan, Steve, and John,

I wanted to give you an early heads up that our second annual Washington Center for Equitable Growth conference will be held on September 18-19, 2014, in Washington, D.C.

The conference will begin on the 18th with a private, invite-only day of discussion on how academics and policymakers can harness the power of the post-Piketty moment moving forward. This meeting will enable Equitable Growth the engage directly with senior policymakers on our center's objectives.

Day 2 of the conference on the 19th will be a public event so we can address a wider community of experts and economists, feature a newsworthy keynote address, and participate in breakout sessions focused on the latest research and policy recommendations to help policymakers build more equitable and sustainable economic growth in the years to come.

We'll be in touch shortly with location and reservation details.

Best,
Heather

FOR U.S. CONGRESS

Dear John & Mary,

Today we honor our presidential leaders past and present. One of my favorite quotes from President Jimmy Carter is, "We become not a melting pot but a beautiful mosaic. Different people, different beliefs, different yearnings, different hopes, different dreams."

As someone who came to this country at a young age and now raising three beautiful children of my own I recognize the importance of these words. As a delegate I have fought hard to promote fairness, justice, and equality and in Congress you can count on me to continue this fight.

I wish everyone a Happy President's Day and hope you are all staying safe and warm.

Sincerely,

Joseline

Subject: our problem with SB 128

Dear Governor Brown,

Our problem SB 128 is not about truly terminally ill people having palliative care or even a way to end their lives. Our problem is with what medical choices will be made for People with Disabilities whose lives are not considered valuable, by many, and are seen as a drain on rationed medical resources for more "whole people."

It was said that the "health committee" meeting that the disability rights community was reached out to, and that our concerns were allayed. They are not.

"I decided after 41 years of battling this curse that attacks children of all ages, I would put myself in that chair, that steel imprisonment that long has been deemed the dystrophic child's plight. . . . I realize my life is half, so I must learn to do things halfway. I just have to learn to try to be good at being half a person." -- Jerry Lewis Diane Coleman JD -- President and CEO Of Not Dead Yet says: Singer is advocating the denial of medical treatment to infants with disabilities. As some here have pointed out, this is consistent with his long held views. About 200 NDY activists protested Princeton's hiring of Singer in 1999, and 14 were arrested as reported in the NY Times. We contend that Singer's words violate Princeton's policy against hate speech. Today, our Singer expert Stephen Drake is working on a petition which we hope will gain overwhelming support in the disability community and force the University to respond.

Hi John,

Just wanted to reach out and reintroduce myself. Eryn gave me you current email. I worked with you several years ago (with Mary Pat Bonner) raising funds for CAP.

I was passed an invitation from Don Fowler and Gov. Hodges to an event in Columbia, SC next week and saw that you're the guest of honor. I'll be in SC, so my dad, who was the state party chairman eons ago, and I will be attending. Just thought I'd write a short note saying hello and look forward to seeing you.

Let me know if there's anything I can ever do to help.

This comes from Anita Dunn, one of our communications people on the campaign: "Both the Times (Peter Baker) and the Post (Balz, Shaleigh Murray) are working on big transition pieces. A timely reminder to all our task force members not to talk to the press is definitely in order." Please pass this message to others on your teams. And just a reminder, all press calls should be directed to Anita Dunn or Dan Pfeiffer at the campaign. Thanks.

I think we can definitely get the first answered. I will make sure to flag.

The second is a good question I will raise. The rationale section starts with groups which I think is really important. The first survey is really meant to be a lay of the land--what are people's fav/unfavs, right track/wrong track, initial head to head, etc. Very basic. Then the online panel is supposed to provide some qualitative to underpin that. We also have the qualitative Garin already did. But that may not be the right way to go and I'll ask the pollsters about that. Like I said, I'm certain the plan will change--I am many things, but a pollster is not one!

I am in favor of getting going along the lines outlined. One track I think we should explore is whether and how attacks from the right strengthen and immunize her on the left. Another question I have is whether qualitative is being used enough to inform the early quantitative research.

Dear Robby

I look forward to reviewing and sharing any thoughts that may be valuable.

My one thought from the conversation I participated in with Wendy is that her strength is in branding and marketing, using the evidence base in determining how to generate the behaviors sought in the target audience. So I think she has the capacity and creativity to drive the brand development and strategy from inception to execution. I imagine she would rely on the data that is being collected through the polling and focus groups you outline but equally as important, would likely have questions she might suggest specifically be included in the process. That's why I'm not sure she is an advisor in the sense of opining on things as they occur but instead an actual partner with the team in defining and shaping what information is needed and then how to synthesize it for the purposes at hand.

This may make more sense once you meet her and have a thoughtful conversation about her strengths and talents. Then I think her active engagement can be efficient and productive for the activity you have outlined. Should we arrange a time for you to meet her or at least connect with her by telephone?

best.

Madame Secretary, Cheryl, John,

Attached is an updated summary of the research process and a budget. I want to emphasize that THIS WILL CHANGE because the team will have better ideas on methodology and the strategy will evolve as the project progresses. I would still assume our budget will be in the $2+ million range per my earlier memo, even though the attached budget is lower than $2 million (obviously, we are going to make this as cheap as we can without sacrificing thoroughness and quality).

Below is information on the participants. Attached is (1) a revised overview of the process and (2) a budget.

Please let me know if there are any objections or recommended changes, otherwise I will proceed with the plan as outlined.

Thanks!

THE TEAM:

Pollsters: Jef Pollock and John Anzalone

Media consultant: Saul Shorr (like Jef and John, I will ask that he participate in the project, with no obligation by you or him that he work for the campaign, should you decide to run. I will offer Saul $20k plus travel costs to work with us for the next three months and attend a number of the focus groups).

Advisors: I will have Wendy provide input on the instruments and methodology for the first round--then we can evaluate the degree we want to share data. I would like to talk to her before we lock this in, since I have never met her.

SELF RESEARCH

We don't have a thematically organized set of self research on the your accomplishments pre-State. I would like to give the pollsters full access to all raw materials on accomplishments pre 2009, especially the Senate. It's very important that we come out of this process understanding which accomplishments are most meaningful to voters.

POLICY

I would like to loop Dan and Jake into drafting of likely policy initiatives for testing--they have already provided me some input, but I'd like to get them on calls with the team to drill down on this in more detail, since it's so important. I know that policy is still a nascent process and will be highly iterative, but I don't think it makes sense to do the polling in isolation from the policy work itself (since the research should be supporting and informing the policy development).

Dear colleagues,

I am writing to share the news that Elizabeth Claps, Director of International Boards & Advancement Events, has accepted the position of Alumni Relations Manager with the global law firm Cleary Gottlieb Steen and Hamilton in New York. Although we are sorry that Elizabeth is leaving our Law community, we are pleased that she is taking this next step in her career.

Elizabeth has been at the Law Center for nine years, starting in the Office of Special Events. From there, she transitioned to the Office of Law Advancement to manage the Law Center's European, Asian, and Latin America Law Alumni Advisory Boards. Her contributions and accomplishments have helped to elevate the Law Center's outreach to alumni around the world. Elizabeth has also helped create successful campaign events around the country.

We will be hosting an Open House in Elizabeth's honor on Thursday, December 4th in the Alumni Lounge, Room 2006 Hotung from 4:00 until 6:00 p.m. I hope you will be able to stop by and join us in congratulating Elizabeth on the outstanding work she has done at the Law Center and to wish her well in her new job.

America could heat an estimated 6 million homes each year with the natural gas lost through leaks and outdated equipment and industrial practices.

These leaks also contribute to climate change—pound for pound methane in natural gas is 25 times as potent as carbon dioxide.

We can't afford to wait any longer. Tell the EPA to advocate for strong methane standards that will protect workers and communities.

Dear John,

Last month, the EPA proposed new standards to significantly reduce natural gas leaks happening right now. This is a win-win for workers and the environment.

'08 Elections and the Clean Energy Economy
Sierra Club Political Program Highlights

Washington, DC: As the election heads into its final days, it is already clear that the need to invest in clean energy and green jobs, concern about record gas prices, record oil company profits, and demand for energy independence and action on global warming elevated Sierra Club's priority issues to an unprecedented level.

"For the first time in a Presidential election, candidates and voters are connecting the dots between energy, the environment and the economy," said Carl Pope, Sierra Club Executive Director. "Barack Obama, in particular, has made it clear that investing in cleaner energy will be "priority number one" in his plans for economic recovery."

"Even with the economic crisis rightly dominating the national conversation, candidates are touting investment in renewable energy and energy efficiency technologies as the answer that would jumpstart our economy, create millions of jobs, new industries and opportunities," said Cathy Duvall, Sierra Club Political Director. "And for the first time in American electoral history, presidential candidates aren't debating the existence of global warming but discussing instead the policies they would pursue to curb climate change."

Clean energy has become a defining issue in all of the major battleground Senate races as well as dozens of House contests. The issue is working to draw distinctions between candidates who favor politics as usual candidates who took money from Big Oil and voted to give the oil companies tax breaks and candidates who promise to deliver change in the form of an increased reliance on renewable power and energy efficiency. Candidates around the country are introducing voters to the new lexicon of "green jobs", "clean energy future," and "cap and auction."

For several years the Sierra Club has been working to build momentum and support among the public and office-holders for clean energy as a solution to both the economic and environmental problems Americans face.

The Sierra Club Political Committee's ran a number of programs focused on contrasting endorsed candidates including Barack Obama and his job-creating clean energy investment plan, with John McCain's continuing of the Bush administration's energy and environmental policies. The Sierra Club's program included:

*A national TV ad and scorecard through an independent program highlighting the stark difference between McCain's proposals to continue rewarding Big Oil while Obama's plan stops corporate giveaways. Radio ads were also run in Ohio and in Spanish in Nevada.

*An independent direct contact program that's reached tens of thousands of targeted swing voters in key battleground states. Efforts to promote Barack Obama and his job-creating plans for clean energy focused in NH, CO and OH have included 140,248 phone contacts and 478,540 pieces of mail.

*Our independent canvass knocked on 60,000 doors in PA, OH and VA to discuss Obama's plans for 5 million new green jobs in the U.S. through clean energy and fair trade.

*The Sierra Club is also engaged in an extensive independent canvass on campuses in Denver, Colorado educating young voters on Barack Obama and key ballot initiatives in the state.

*Organizers for the independent program are conducting outreach and voter education about the Presidential and targeted Senate candidates NH, NM, CO, PA, OH, MN, WI, NV and OR.

*Separately, Sierra Club's largest-ever grassroots program coordinated with campaigns deployed 55 staff and thousands of volunteer Sierra Club members to the Obama campaign and targeted Congressional races in 15 states--5 senate races and 33 house races.

*Members have also employed their greatest strength the ability to recruit more grassroots supporters to engage in the election, by using a combination of online organizing tools and existing volunteer structure to recruit Sierra Club members from non-battleground states to phone, e-mail, and travel into swing states to get out the vote.

*Activists will also be reminding their friends and neighbors to vote using text message, via an innovative new website that allows you to "bank" friend's cell phone numbers for an election day text reminder.

*An allied organization, the Sierra Club State Action Fund, is engaged in a number of ballot initiatives and issue advocacy campaigns including energy initiatives in Colorado, Missouri, Utah as well as development and transportation ballot measures in South Dakota and Nevada. The Sierra Club State Action Fund provided voter education on energy and water issues. The program included a total of one million pieces of mail sent, over 200,000 calls made and, in Colorado, over 190,000 doors knocked.

*As part of our continuing and growing collaboration with the American labor movement, earlier this month the Sierra Club and Working America, the community affiliate of the AFL-CIO, held conference calls with their respective members in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Governor Ted Strickland, Secretary-Treasurer of the AFL-CIO, Richard Trumka, and Carl Pope, Sierra Club's Executive Director joined on a conference call with Ohio members to discuss the importance of good jobs and clean energy in this year's election. In Pennsylvania a similar call was lead by Pope, Governor Ed Rendell and United Steelworkers President Leo Gerard. Carl Pope and Cathy Duvall also joined Working America reaching out to their members in Oregon and Virginia.

*The Sierra Club is also fighting against Amendments 47, 49 and 54 in Colorado, Amendment 47 is a so-called "Right-to-Work" initiative that would threaten workers' rights, workplace safety, and would lower wages; Amendment 49 would weaken the rights of workers to spend their own money as they see fit and make it harder to bargain for better wages; and Amendment 54 would silence the voices of people who work for state and local government who want to participate in the political process.

*Sierra Club and its student arm, the Sierra Student Coalition (SSC) supported and engaged in Power Vote—an effort spearheaded by the Energy Action Coalition to unite young "climate voters" behind a platform centered on combating global warming pollution, creating millions of new green jobs, and ensuring our nation's energy independence by transitioning to a dynamic new clean energy economy. The SSC has been active with this effort on over 50 campuses.

On Wednesday, November 5th, Sierra Club will join with other environmental groups to discuss the election results and what this election means for moving forward with clean energy solutions with a new administration and Congress. The press conference will be at 2 PM at the National Press Club in Washington, DC.

Subject: Four Days Away

Dear Friend,

This year is rapidly coming to a close, but we still need your help to raise $7,000 by the December 31st deadline.

Starting on January 1st our campaign will enter the final 9 week sprint to Election Day. Soon we'll need to spend heavily to run costly ads on L.A.'s TV stations and the web. But in order to reach all the voters in the city, we simply must have more resources.

Please give \$50, \$35 or \$25 by the end of the year and help us meet our grassroots goal of \$7,000.

We need your help. Los Angeles will be voting for a new mayor on March 5th, but we need to start talking to voters in January. It has already been reported that super PACs will be putting money in this race. Your grassroots contributions will ensure that the voters and not the special interest will decide this election.

Donate \$50, \$35 or \$25 today and help us reach our goal.

Let's make sure that the super PACs don't control this election.

Thank you,

Eric

P.S. The super PACs will be putting money in this race. Let's make sure Team Garcetti's voice is heard! Contribute to the campaign today.

I think what I can be accurately accused of having an anti-suburb bias, since Vamoose clearly caters to the Maryland crowd. Plus, it's fancier, and deserves a little mockery based on that alone.

But since I think you (like my mom) live in DC proper, it's true that I should not fault you for going to a mode of transport that operates out of Bethesda, especially since it's right near the metro. So in the interest of peacemaking, I'm going to offer a retraction.

Dear John,

I sent you an email several weeks ago but you might have missed it, so I thought it would make sense to just email you once more, and cc Jen. Long story short, I have been discussing the idea of writing a third book with my agent and my editor at Knopf/Pantheon. In the course of those discussions, I have tentatively settled on the idea of a book that would look at the role you have played in the Democratic Party over the course of the last few decades. This would allow me to examine pivotal moments in two presidencies and one presidential campaign, as well as key ideas (including what does it mean to be a progressive and key environmental decisions).

As I'm writing up my proposal, it would be helpful to know whether you'd be willing to cooperate with such a book. I would imagine you would have reservations about a book that would be akin to a biography, but that's not really what this would be. I'm aiming to write a book that helps explain how Washington works, by examining how someone behind the scenes has helped moved the levers of government and operated the machinery of campaigns. And of course, if the book doesn't garner a good advance I won't write it, because I've got plenty of other things on my plate. But I think it could be an interesting project, and it would be great to know to what extent you'd be open to talking to me about this.

I know both of you are very busy, but just drop me a line when you get a chance. I will be traveling in Canada from Friday to Tuesday, but will be reachable all of the usual ways.

Subject: "I never would've agreed to the interview"

Wow, this is a new low.

Mother Jones magazine reported yesterday that Ken Cuccinelli's campaign tricked at least two laid-off workers into appearing in a new attack ad.

Apparently, the women were asked to participate in a documentary, but the next thing they knew, brief out-of-context snippets from their interviews were in a TV ad for someone they'd never heard of.

The women featured in the ad were shocked. "If I had known that's what it was for," one of them told Mother Jones, "I never would've agreed to the interview."

Will you join me and tell Ken Cuccinelli to apologize to these workers and immediately remove the ad from the air?

This sort of thing doesn't just happen by accident. Someone hired the film crew that interviewed these women. Someone told the crew what pitch to use to get them on camera.

Those tactics might be underhanded, but they're not surprising.

After all, Ken Cuccinelli's campaign strategist has a long history of trying to smear political opponents with misleading advertising. He was the mastermind behind the Swift Boat ads that tried to call John Kerry's military record into question back in 2004.

And now Cuccinelli's campaign is resorting to the same dishonest tactics in an attempt to tear Terry down.

Ken Cuccinelli put this ad on air — he can take it down. But he won't do it unless he feels overwhelming pressure from the public telling him that keeping it up is unacceptable.

Add your name to our petition calling on Cuccinelli to pull the ad and to apologize to the women who were misled into appearing in it:

<http://action.terrymcauliffe.com/stop-the-lies>

Thanks for stepping up — Virginians deserve to know if Ken Cuccinelli will stand by this disgraceful ad.

The Clinton Campaign Really Wants You to Know How Cheap It Is

By Bryan Thomas/Getty Images
John Podesta rode a bus.

BY KIA MAKARECHI

Hillary Clinton's campaign manager Robby Mook is known for running a tight ship, and he's brought his trademark expense-account conservatism to Brooklyn. Staffers in Clinton's Brooklyn headquarters are, egad, riding the bus between New York and Washington, D.C.

We know this because campaign chairman John Podesta, a longtime Clinton-world fixer and former think-tanker, lobbyist, and Barack Obama staffer, took a Washington Post reporter along for one of the Beltway bus rides. "A cheap bus ride has become an inside joke and something of a merit badge for Clinton staffers, many of whom commute frequently for meetings and other work in Washington," the Post reports.

Podesta told the paper that the penny-pinching has "built spirit" among the younger Clinton campaign staffers, and taking the bus has become an act of "solidarity."

There are, of course, practical considerations for the cost-reduction efforts. Clinton's campaign, should she win the Democratic nomination, could well be outspent by the Republicans. While few billionaire haymakers have yet to line up for Clinton, the Republican side seems stuffed to the brim with eager super-donors.

It's worth noting that there's a rich tradition of politicians courting these types of stories. "I would always rent a crappy car for my official vehicle, just so I could brag about how little I spend," former congressman Anthony Weiner once wrote. "It worked." (Weiner included the link to a New York Times story that highlighted his leasing of a Chevrolet Impala.)

Clinton's team has also said her campaign is about "everyday Americans," so the leaner operation suits the ethos that the multi-millionaire former First Lady, senator, and secretary of state, is hoping to give off.

Podesta, however, makes a curious poster child for this effort. The longtime Washington fixture started a lobbying firm with his brother in the late 1980s. Later, as the founder and head of the Center for American Progress, a think tank he founded, Podesta was making approximately $200,000 a year. He took a pay cut to make it to the White House, but still took home $172,000 a year. The man could afford to pay out of pocket for an Amtrak ticket if he so desired.

Clinton has also reportedly adjusted her traveling style to fit in with the new campaign vibes. While she is known as something of a private jet aficionado, she now travels commercial—if still in first-class. Senator Rand Paul, meanwhile, can't stop chatting with reporters in coach.

While there are undoubtedly eager young staffers on Clinton's campaign who can't really afford repeated out-of-pocket trips on Amtrak, the bus rides of "everyday Americans" don't qualify for reporter ride-alongs.

And while Clinton's leaner operation succeeds in marking an operational shift from her money-burning 2008 campaign, it's hard to know whether stories like the spotlight on Podesta's adventures on the Normal People

Express translate well outside of the Beltway. After all, Clinton is heavily favored to overcome the primary challenge currently posed by Senator Bernie Sanders, but he definitely has her beat in the not-caring-about-big-money game.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

STATEMENT ON HIV AND AIDS

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

I'M SORRY FOR THE PAIN MY COMMENTS CAUSED AND I WANT TO USE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO TALK ABOUT NOT ONLY WHERE WE'VE COME FROM BUT WHERE WE MUST GO IN THIS FIGHT AGAINST HIV AND AIDS.

TO BE CLEAR, The Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV AND AIDS – unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation, but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis, and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

And then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly – too slowly – ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists, and ordinary people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV AND AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We’ve come a long way since. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good, and erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country’s history. This is work that I’ve been committed to for a long time. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV AND AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there’s even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people’s health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV AND AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. And we should expand access to medications like PrEP.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. We’re still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we’re also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. BUT IN EXCUSABLY, HIV AND AIDS CONTINUES TO DISPROPORTIONATELY IMPACT COMMUNITIES OF COLOR, TRANSGENDER PEOPLE, YOUTH AND STILL GAY AND BISEXUAL MEN. WHEN THE TOOLS EXIST TO END THIS EPIDEMIC ONCE AND FOR ALL, THERE ARE STILL FAR TOO MANY PEOPLE DYING TODAY.

More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And AS PRESIDENT, I PROMISE YOU THAT I WILL NOT let up until we reach that goal.

And I think they are looking for more of an explanation, as Teddy mentioned, because they are just so dumbfounded by the comment. But agree that it can then be an opportunity for HRC to talk about her policy agenda for an AIDS free generation, etc.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagement over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest

LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

I stayed with Chad last night who was receiving lots of angry calls and notes from people that he didn't call her out by name. He wouldn't do that to her and kept stressing she just made a mistake, but suggested we need to do something more today to protect her. She has a great record and we lost a lot of ground messaging-wise.

I think our lingering problem on this is that people just don't understand, on a fact level, what happened and how she could have gotten so mixed up. And in the absence of any explanatory information, they assume the worst -- like that this was some cynical political strategy of ours. (Which, I would note, makes no sense -- why would our strategy be to piss everyone off? -- but regardless.)

So I would vote to do a little something just to give people an understanding of how this happened, and then pivot to something else -- maybe that's celebrating the people who really did start a national conversation on AIDS, or something else.

Believe LP is working on a draft that could be a Facebook note or a Medium post, just to give something to react to.

Hi all,

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV

rollout? Is there any interest in putting a

Dear John,

The Economic Recovery Advisory Board is a terrific idea on both policy and political grounds. I had suggested a similar idea during the campaign and had recommended that Volcker chair a special commission on economic recovery. Please keep me in mind for an appointment to the board. I remain interested in serving President-elect Obama's Administration and an appointment to the Board might prove the most appropriate way for me to do so. Thanks for your consideration. Have a wonderful Thanksgiving (if you have anything to do with preparing the food, I know it will be awesome.)

Friend,

Bruce Rauner just poured another $3 million into his own campaign, bringing his total to an eye-popping $26,000,000.

At this rate, he's going to break the record before Election Day -- no one will have ever spent more of their own money to take over Illinois.

There won't be many more chances to fight back. If you're with us, chip in $5 or more now:

Cheryl:

It's been way too long since we touched base, and I hope this email isn't too presumptuous.

QuantiFind is a local big data analytics company that was founded by two quantum physicists out of Stanford. I serve on the company's board and recently learned that it has been approached about applying its analytics to political campaigns. The approach has been by the Republican National Committee.

The company has first rate venture capital backing (Andreessen Horowitz, Redpoint, US Ventures, Comcast, Publicis) and top of the line commercial clients, including Disney, Pepsi, Heineken, and Taco Bell, all of whom are willing to provide references. As you might surmise, clients of this quality don't come to a Silicon Valley start up run by a bunch of physicists unless the company has something special and valuable to offer.

QuantiFind's products fall in the category of predictive analytics, but for reasons I won't bore you with here, they are unlike any other predictive analytics of which I am aware. Simply put, the physicists have figured out how to pull actionable intelligence from social network information that can be used to allocate media budgets, design campaign ads, and help strategize campaign positions. In other words, they can help you manage your media and your message so as to optimize your ability to attract votes.

There is very little press on the company, by design, but the following might be generally useful:

<http://www.businesswire.com/news/home/20141216005134/en/Quantifind-Introduces-Signum-Delivering-On-Demand-Brand-Strategy#.VJBqa6TF9DB>

The company has no political tilt, and is happy to work with either or both major parties. Obviously, if it is going to work for both, it will have to follow strict confidentiality and segregation of function protocols, all of which can, I believe be appropriately implemented and monitored.

If it were up to me, I'd prefer that they work exclusively for the Democratic side of the fence, but that might not be in the cards. As a second best, I'd rather have both parties gain access to the technology than have the other side of the aisle monopolize the opportunity.

If any of this makes sense from your perspective, what's the best way to proceed?

I am copying the company's CEO, Ari Tuchman, on this email so that you can deal directly with him as well.

Hope you are doing well, and I suspect that you are as busy as can be.

Joe Grundfest

Subject: Hand Turkeys to the President:

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

John,

As you sit down at the Thanksgiving table this year, you and your loved ones can breathe a little easier.

Why? Because President Obama secured historic clean air protections during his first term in office and we can now look forward to four more years of a bold EPA that will stand up for our health, our families, and our environment.

But this holiday season, President Obama's got one more job to do to give us another big reason to be thankful -- and you can help remind him in a way that's sure to get his attention and make the kid in you smile.

Send President Obama your own, customized "hand turkey" to thank him for protecting clean air and urge him to finalize two historic and life-saving clean air protections.

Did you ever make the Thanksgiving craft project as a child where you cut out the shape of your hand on a piece of paper and add colorful feather pieces to transform it into a turkey decoration? We've built a tool that allows you to create a virtual "hand turkey" for a fun and festive way to deliver your message about clean air to President Obama.

Although we're using this funny project as a way to catch the president's eye, the need for these clean air safeguards is quite serious. These life-saving protections will help cut down on the amount of dangerous soot pollution in our air, which contributes to respiratory illness and even premature death. They will also curb industrial carbon pollution, which harms our health and fuels climate change.

So this Thanksgiving, join a show of "hand turkeys" in thanking President Obama for clean air, and urge him to put strong soot and carbon protections in place:

YourHandTurkey.org/LCV

Wishing you and your family a very happy Thanksgiving!

Sincerely,

Vanessa Kritzer
Online Campaigns Manager
League of Conservation Voters

Send President Obama a festive thank you note and urge him to keep working to protect our environment!

I believe we need to do intensive focus groups on McCain as soon as possible. He is emerging with a very clear conservative message, combined with a reformist image that can be powerful.

I think we need to dig deeper on him. I think we should move asap.

I'm thinking for the expensive Romney and McCain spots we wait until after Florida tonight to pull the trigger. So, we focus on getting today's scripts in good shape.

I'm trying to get more McCain and Romney "economy" scripts. Might not be doable for next week.

Also, McCain "Bomb bomb bomb" spots which could be updated with his recent promise of "more wars." Please do look into "laugh". We all gave it high marks. Romney economy spot is good idea too, Tara. Subject: [big campaign] If Health Reform Is Unconstitutional, So Is Medicare

On MSNBC today, Former Reagan official/current CATO legal scholar Roger Pilon affirmed that the same flawed logic conservatives are using to argue that health reform is unconstitutional would render Medicare unconstitutional as well.

Transcript:

Millhiser: "...And I also want to push back on something that Roger said when he suggested there's nothing in the Constitution that allows the regulation of health care. If Congress can't pass laws regulating health care, Medicare is unconstitutional. Medicaid is unconstitutional. SCHIP is unconstitutional."

Pilon: "Absolutely right, Ian. I'm not going to disagree with you." What we're talking about here is the distinction between the Constitution and modern post-New Deal constitutional law. The founders would be turning in their graves if they'd seen what we've done under the commerce power. But you said it authorizes Congress to regulate commerce. Here you've got a bill that requires people to buy insurance. That's not regulating commerce. That's regulating human activity, indeed, human inactivity."

Subject: Sign our card for President Obama's birthday:

John --

President Obama is the reason I'm a progressive organizer.

The idea that individuals have the power to change their communities -- and the world -- still inspires me.

I know I'm not alone on this -- that's why OFA is working on a grassroots gesture for President Obama's birthday on Monday.

Choose the birthday card with the message you want to send the President -- and sign your name now.

Birthday cards aren't going to get the House to knock off the nonsense and get to work.

But they're a simple way of saying thanks to a president who is fighting every day for the kind of change you and I care so much about.

And when you see thousands of names and personal notes from all over the country, I imagine that's a pretty amazing feeling.

Send in your well wishes to the Organizer in Chief -- sign one of OFA's cards today:

Hi Tom,

We were aiming to get the first draft of the questionnaire to the campaign by Monday morning so that we have a little more time to sharpen the questionnaire before sending it out. The plan is to field this on Sunday November 9th.

We'll do our best to get it to you sooner than Monday, but it will depend on how much work we still need to do on the questionnaire.

Thanks,

Subject: Secretary Clinton's Foundation work in 2014

Happy almost- New Year to everyone. As we approach the end of the year, I wanted to share some of the key accomplishments of Secretary Clinton's programs during 2014 and thank you for your feedback and support throughout the year. This has been an exciting and productive year, and as always there is more to do! We look forward to continuing to build these programs in 2015 working towards greater opportunity for our country's youngest children, young adults entering the workforce, and woman and girls across the globe. Here are highlights from 2014:

Too Small to Fail

Throughout 2014, Too Small to Fail focused on building a public awareness and action campaign aimed at parents and caregivers to address the challenge of the "Word Gap" where children in lower income families tend to hear fewer words in the first years of life which can leave them less prepared for school and later life. This year we worked to address this challenge in the following ways:

- In February 2014, Too Small to Fail and Univision launched Pequeños y Valiosos (Young & Valuable) – a national, cross-platform public action campaign to mobilize parents to talk read and sing to their young children that has amassed over 285 million viewer impressions and reached tens of thousands of Hispanic families.
- In June, we announced a partnership with the American Academy of pediatrics (AAP) promoting their new recommendation of reading and talking to children from the day a baby is born by developing pediatric toolkits for their 62,000 pediatricians to share with parents. We also partnered with Text4baby, Sesame Workshop and Kaiser Permanente to promote the importance of talking, reading, and singing to children through mobile text messaging.
- Over the last year, Too Small to Fail actively engaged the entertainment industry to help inform audiences across the country about the importance of early learning. As a result, four television shows integrated content about early language development into their storylines, including a major integration across multiple episodes of Orange is the New Black, and four additional shows have committed to integrations in 2015.
- In 2014, Too Small to Fail launched on-the-ground efforts to close the word gap in two cities: Oakland, CA and Tulsa, OK. These community-wide "Talking is Teaching: Talk, Read, Sing" campaigns work with trusted partners, including hospitals and members of the faith community, to distribute information and resources to parents. The locally-based, intensive nature of these campaigns will enable us to evaluate the most successful interventions so we can spread what works to other cities.

Looking ahead, in 2015, we will expand our media work to specifically target dads and lower income viewers. We will also serve as a resource for cities interested in launching "Talking is Teaching" campaigns by creating a web-based resource portal and hosting convenings.

Job One

Secretary Clinton launched Job One at the CGI America meeting in June 2014 to address the challenges of youth employment in the U.S. Although Job One is less than six months old, it has gained significant traction and support in the youth employment space, including the following accomplishments to date:

A total of 16 CGI commitments-to-action to increase employment opportunities for youth valued at more than $37 million, when fully funded and implemented, are expected to directly impact more than 150,000 youth in the United States.

13 private sector companies that represent a wide range of industries and geographies in the United States, including The Gap, Marriott, and Microsoft, helped create the "business case" that all companies – no matter their size, location or sector – can train, hire or mentor unemployed youth to address their core business needs.

In addition to the private sector commitments, the Small Business Majority and the North America's Building Trades made commitments to recruit additional business and launch an apprentice program, respectively.

In 2015 we will continue to expand this work, adding additional companies and highlighting lessons learned for global youth employment leaders when CGI convenes CGI-Middle East and Africa in Morocco mid-year.

No Ceilings: The Full Participation Project

Over the last year, No Ceilings convened global partners to collect and evaluate data on the progress women and girls have made in the 20 years since Secretary Clinton addressed the United Nations' 4th World Conference on Women, declaring "women's rights are human rights, and human rights are women's rights." In 2014, No Ceilings announced impactful new efforts to build on that progress and help accelerate women's full participation in the next 20 years:

At the 2014 Clinton Global Initiative meeting, No Ceilings galvanized more than 30 cross-sector partners to commit more than $600 million to ensure 14 million girls in countries around the world including Pakistan, Bangladesh, and Nigeria can enter and succeed in secondary education.

Through its partnership with the Gates Foundation, No Ceilings collected over 1.8 million data points from over 190 countries highlighting the gains women and girls have made over the last 20 years and the challenges that still remain. No Ceilings will evaluate and share this data in a progress report and data visualization that will be released in March 2015.

In February, No Ceilings launched a conversation series to hear directly from women and girls about the progress and challenges they've seen in their own lives and communities. Since then, No Ceilings has hosted 12 live and virtual conversations across a range of topics from girls in STEM to maternal health – engaging more than 12,000 participants worldwide.

2015 will be a big year for No Ceilings as we launch our progress report and leverage our findings to continue the effort to enable women and girls to achieve full participation. Following our launch, we will work closely with individuals and institutions globally to educate, raise public awareness, generate social media conversations, and identify what works to close the participation gap; continuing to make the case for the full participation of women and girls has the potential to increase prosperity, security, and opportunity for all.

Best wishes for a happy, healthy new year

Important Information

- Tickets are non-transferrable.
- Changes to your itinerary may affect your fare.
- Refund and exchange restrictions and penalties for failure to cancel unwanted travel may apply. If your travel plans change, call us before departure to change your reservation. If you do not board your train, your entire reservation from that point will be canceled. If you board a different train without notifying us, you will have to pay for it separately; the conductor cannot apply the money paid for your prior reservation. For all travel on or after March 1, 2014, for most Acela Express Business class reservations and Reserved Coach class reservations, you must cancel your reservation at least 24 hours prior to the train's departure in order to be eligible for a full refund. If the reservation is canceled within 24 hours of departure, a refund fee will apply. If the reservation is not canceled prior to scheduled departure ("no show"), the entire amount paid for the reservation will be forfeited. See the refund/ exchange policy at Amtrak.com/refund.
- Summary of Conditions of Contract: Ticket valid for carriage or refund (subject to the refund rules of the fare purchased) for twelve months after date of issue unless otherwise specified. Amtrak tickets may only be sold or issued by Amtrak or an authorized travel agent/tour operator. Tickets sold or issued by an unauthorized third party will be voided by Amtrak. This ticket is a contract of carriage between Amtrak and the ticket holder, which is subject to specific terms and conditions, which are available for inspection at Amtrak ticket counters, on the Amtrak website at Amtrak.com/conditionsofcontract , or by calling 1-800-USA-RAIL. Tickets sold for non-Amtrak service are subject to the tariffs of the providing carrier.
- Questions? Contact us online at Amtrak.com/contact or call 1-800-USA-RAIL (1-800-872-7245) or TDD/TTY (1-800-523-6590).

Friend,

Tomorrow, when we close the books on 2015, our campaign will have to officially file our fundraising totals with the FEC. This is a major test. Senator Portman and the Koch brothers will study our report closely for signs of weakness. It's never been more important to hit our goal before the end of the year.

I'm counting on you.

A compilation of essays that look at the constitutional foundations and limitations of the U.S. government in a contemporary context, this book examines how laws and freedoms collide in cases where individuals leak information to the media. The book explains how the U.S. Supreme Court has interpreted laws that pit freedoms against government interests, and considers how the Internet world and big data are affecting privacy.

Today, the United State Supreme Court announced that next term it will hear the case of Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association, which calls into question the right of public sector to collect a “fair share” fee when it bargains for non-union members. These fees ensure that our public sector unions can continue their fight for fair wages and benefits that teachers, nurses, child care workers, EMTs, and so many others deserve who serve our children and our communities day in and day out. These workers deserve to be part of the strong middle class in America and their unions help to make it so. I will be watching this case closely and will be standing firmly united behind our unions in their fight for their right to bargain collectively for the higher wages that reflect the value of their work.

We support crafting a statement. Key is to stay at high level reaffirming her support for protecting workers' right to organize and perhaps stating hope Court will do the same (think she expressed hope SCOTUS would rule in favor of marriage equality while the case was still pending). But we don't want it to look like she's getting ahead of them (e.g., predicting a bad outcome) since they've just taken the case and we don't know the result.

PUBLIC SERVICE WORKERS ON SUPREME COURT GRANT
OF CERT IN *FRIEDRICHS V. CTA

Lawsuit Seeks to Curtail Freedom of Firefighters, Teachers, Nurses, First-Responders to Stick Together and Advocate for Better Public Services, Better Communities

Jeopardizes American Promise that Hard Work Leads Families to a Decent Life

WASHINGTON—NEA President Lily Eskelsen García, AFT President Randi Weingarten, CTA President Eric C. Heins, AFSCME President Lee Saunders, and SEIU President Mary Kay Henry issued the following joint statement today in response to U.S. Supreme Court granting cert to Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association:

“We are disappointed that at a time when big corporations and the wealthy few are rewriting the rules in their favor, knocking American families and our entire economy off-balance, the Supreme Court has chosen to take a case that threatens the fundamental promise of America—that if you work hard and play by the rules you should be able to provide for your family and live a decent life.

“The Supreme Court is revisiting decisions that have made it possible for people to stick together for a voice at work and in their communities—decisions that have stood for more than 35 years—and that have allowed people to work together for better public services and vibrant communities.

“When people come together in a union, they can help make sure that our communities have jobs that support our families. It means teachers can stand up for their students. First responders can push for critical equipment to protect us. And social workers can advocate effectively for children’s safety.

“America can’t build a strong future if people can’t come together to improve their work and their families’ futures. Moms and dads across the country have been standing up in the thousands to call for higher wages and unions. We hope the Supreme Court heeds their voices.”

And public servants are speaking out, too, about how Friedrichs v. CTA would undermine their ability to provide vital services the public depends on. In their own words:

“As a school campus monitor, my job is to be on the front lines to make sure our students are safe. Both parents and students count on me—it’s a responsibility that I take very seriously. It’s important for me to have the right to voice concerns over anything that might impede the safety of my students, and jeopardizing my ability to speak up for them is a risk for everyone.”

—Carol Peek, a school campus security guard from Ventura, Calif.

“I love my students, and I want them to have everything they need to get a high-quality public education. When educators come together, we can speak with the district about class size, about adequate staffing, about the need for counselors, nurses, media specialists and librarians in schools. And we can advocate for better practices that serve our kids. With that collective voice, we can have conversations with the district that we probably wouldn’t be able to have otherwise—and do it while engaging our communities, our parents and our students.”

—Kimberly Colbert, a classroom teacher from St. Paul, Minn.

“As a mental health worker, my colleagues and I see clients who are getting younger and more physical. Every day we do our best work to serve them and keep them safe, but the risk of injury and attack is a sad, scary reality of the job. But if my coworkers and I come together and have a collective voice on the job, we can advocate for better patient care, better training and equipment, and safe staffing levels. This is about all of us. We all deserve safety and dignity on the job, because we work incredibly hard every day and it’s certainly not glamorous.”

—Kelly Druskis-Abreu, a mental health worker from Worcester, Mass.

“Our number one job is to protect at-risk children. Working together, front-line social workers and investigators have raised standards and improved policies that keep kids safe from abuse and neglect. I can’t understand why the Supreme Court would consider a case that could make it harder for us to advocate for the children and families we serve—this work is just too important.”

Hello John,

I hope things are well. I'm following up with you again on PACE. We are about to launch the largest residential PACE program in the nation next month. The program makes use of the State of CA's new loss reserve to protect mortgage holders. Given how quickly residential PACE is moving, and the recent re-engagement by FHFA regarding the State of CA PACE reserve, it would be great to catch up when you can carve out a moment.

In addition, Nat Simons recently invested in my company and we were having lunch recently when your name came up. Perhaps the three of us can get on the phone sometime soon.

I'll also be in DC on May 10-12 if you'd like to get together in person.

Best,

Cisco

You are currently booked on nonstop American Airlines flight 210 LAS- JFK departing 8:00 AM and arriving at 4:15 PM (was originally $750-- now sold out).

Comms team just wrote back that they think you should be able to finish both hits by 5:45 AM to make your 8:00 AM flight and that these times are all estimates so we can request other timing. Of course, we might want to put you on a later flight just to be safe/less crunched on timing.

Two good 1 stop options on American that leave later from LAS and arrive into LGA:

$482 one way	 11:00 am – 9:29 pm American	7h 29m LAS-LGA	1 stop 1h 11m in DFW
$482 one way	 12:05 pm – 9:50 pm American	6h 45m LAS-LGA	1 stop 50m in ORD

Only other nonstop option on American (this one was always really pricey):

$1,403 one way	 11:10 am – 7:24 pm American	5h 14m LAS-JFK	Nonstop

oops!

I mentioned this to John some time back, but think it's a bit more current now.

It is most likely that this decision has already been made by the Court, but on the off chance that history is repeating itself, then it's possible they are still deciding (last time, seems like Roberts went from striking the mandate to supporting it in the weeks before). As Jennifer will remember, it was pretty critical that the President threw the gauntlet down last time on the Court, warning them in the first case that it would politicize the role of the Court for them to rule against the ACA. As a close reader of the case, I honestly believe that was vital to scaring Roberts off.

In this case, I'm not arguing that Hillary spend a lot of time attacking the Court. I do think it would be very helpful to all of our interest in a decision affirming the law, for Roberts and perhaps Kennedy to see negative political consequences to ruling against the government.

Therefore, I think it would be helpful to have a story of how progressives and Hillary would make the Supreme Court an election issue (which would be a ready argument for liberals) if the Court rules against the government. It's not that you wish that happens. But that would be the necessary consequence of a negative decision...the Court itself would become a hugely important political issue.

At CAP Action, we can get that story started. But kinda rests on you guys to make it stick.

What do you think? If you want to proceed, we should move soon.

Let me know thoughts. And I'm happy to discuss.

Boehner and his Tea Party allies want to undo immigration reform.
Raising the minimum wage? Not a chance of happening.
Giving the middle class a tax cut...nope

Wow!

July is one of my favorite months – it would have to be, since it starts with Independence Day and ends with my birthday. I wanted to thank you for making this July even more wonderful than usual.

We asked a lot of you, but you really stepped up to the bat. You did everything from donning your sneakers and standing with Wendy Davis to calling on Congress to pass common sense gun regulations. You joined us in fighting to fix the student loan crisis and then sent me about the best birthday card I've ever received.

So thank you for being on my team. You're the reason I keep fighting.

Thanks again for a great weekend of planning.

Attached are three documents:

- 1) Updated Phase Document: This should include all the additional dates that were from our conversation this weekend. Please flag any additional dates to Heather or shifts by Tuesday COB.
- 2) Action Item Sheet: This has all the immediate action item and meetings that came from our time together. In our Wednesday Senior Staff meeting, we will review the status of each. If you are the owner of an action item, please please make sure you have put each in motion by Wednesday morning, and have a clear timeline for completion.
- 3) Planning Calendars: We have transitioned the beautifully formatted document into an excel sheet. Please review this, identify which pieces you own (all pieces need an owner), and work with your teams on any additions or adjustments that are necessary. Please send these in to Heather by Tuesday COB. Since there are many that are going to be coming in, please use comments or color your font so I can track the changes.

Finally, a note on confidentiality. These documents have a lot of confidential pieces in them. Please be incredibly mindful of any printed or electronic copy of these, and do not forward beyond this list.

The next step in planning will be that we take these calendars and turn these into workplans with benchmarks, dates, and owners. These will be due next Monday, September 21.

As always, let me know any way I can format or shift things to improve this process.

Thanks,

Doug/Terry/John/Justin:

We are on to meet this weekend at 8am on Saturday - does anyone want to propose a location?

In terms of goals for the 2 hour meeting: to outline the relationship, largely managed by Doug and Justin, b/w the President's non-Foundation revenue generating activities and the Foundation, with associated implications for how we position him and/or the Foundation for any gaps based upon ideas we conclude make most sense.

We can then draft something us for WJC that will be transparent to him, his family and to others so we have gotten everyone on the same page.

thanks.

Subject: Before it's too late

Dear John,

"Drill, Baby, Drill!" ... it's the rallying cry of the "GOP's far right" made famous by Sarah Palin, and it's the deeply-rooted belief of our opponent, Congressman Pat Toomey.

Congressman Toomey strongly advocates for oil drilling in our Great Lakes -- the largest collection of freshwater lakes here on earth! (Is it any wonder he does, given that he has received thousands of dollars in campaign contributions from Halliburton, the world's second largest oil services industry company?)

If drilling was allowed in Lake Erie (home to one of the world's largest commercial fresh-water fisheries) and an oil rig exploded and could not be capped -- similar to the BP environmental disaster in the Gulf of Mexico -- the current size of the BP oil spill would be:

Industries would be devastated. Sports fisherman and families would be crushed; their recreational pursuits curtailed. Lake Erie would cease to exist as we know it.

To better appreciate the size of the current BP oil spill, here it is imposed over Pennsylvania (stretching from Baltimore to NYC):

In the glare of the general election battle, Congressman Toomey's radical views are "now beginning to surface" ... the first of which is on our environment. Pennsylvania is a Democratic "Blue State" ... it's a presidential battleground state.

Congressman Toomey's extreme views are not only to the right of former Senator Rick Santorum, *they are in "lock-step" with Jesse Helms!

For the Nation, for Pennsylvania, and for our children's children, we can't risk Congressman Toomey being elected with his extreme views -- and not just about drilling in our precious Great Lakes! By making a contribution, even just a few dollars, you'll ensure that Congressman Toomey's support for privatization of social security, a flat tax and social inequality do not represent America.

We are quickly coming to the end of our first fundraising quarter (two weeks away) as the U.S. Senate nominee for the Democratic Party ... help us defeat Pat Toomey before it's too late !

Warmly,
Joe

Subject: ROUNDUP: Responses to Roadshow TY Notes

Hi John-

Here's a roundup of the thank-you note responses that have come in to jpodesta@hillaryclinton. I'm happy to respond as needed.

Mark Schnapp and Rick Hills have requested a call and pull-aside, respectively. Irene would like a meeting once we hire an AAPI director and Kukendall would love a DC meeting when he's in town if you have time.

Thanks!
Milia

Rick Hills:

Available for a quick hello at the finance conference in Brooklyn? Out at the Bronx Zoo meeting with some key folks about WCS's wildlife conservation efforts.

Fiona Ma:

Thanks, please feel free to call on me anytime re HRC and if anyone has tax issues

Dan Jacobson:

"The Democratic Foundation of Orange County, which I've Chaired for five years and which Wylie Aitken had Chaired for the previous 17 years, is the heart of the donor class of Democrats in Orange County, where there are 450,000 Registered Democrats. Our members include everyone from Disney to Unions to wealthy and caring individuals. Please stay in touch"

Irene Bueno:

Would like to schedule a meeting with you and your team to discuss an Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) integrated campaign strategy once we hire an AAPI director.

(Milia will flag this for Political)

Steve Cloobek:

Looking forward to working together as well.

Lisa Kaufmann:

Thank you and Amanda! It means a lot to have you in Boulder. Mailing you a copy of the CO narrative project tomorrow so keep an eye out.

Raul Martinez:

"If there is anything you need me to do, let me know. I have plenty of examples."

Mark Schnapp:

"John. It was great meeting you. There is an issue that is potentially destructive to her campaign that would not have come up in the primary races of 2008. I would like to discuss it with you and make sure that there is a plan to deal with it."

Frederick Kuykendall:

"...headed to Mexico tomorrow on the BP case. I'm in the thick of it now on behalf of domestic counties, towns, cities and a host of business' as well as myriad Mexican interests. In these cases and others I've managed to build up quite a expertise in environmental Matters and like you am active in climate change issues...I'm going to assist yall as much as I can and would really like to introduce yall around to some non traditional players. My personal email is Ftkuykendall@yahoo.com . And cell is 7872183354 . I'm rarely in the D.C. Office but would love to visit if you can spare the time."

Later from Fred: "Here's an update. <http://www.streetinsider.com/dr/news.php?id=10021964> "

Hannah Linkenhoker:

Don't hesitate to reach out. Here to help and in it for the long haul.

Bobby Roberts:

It should be an interesting ride.

As Thanksgiving approaches, the ABA Fund for Justice and Education would like to extend its gratitude to those ABA members and fellow lawyers who have dedicated their time and resources to strengthening the public service programs of the American Bar Association. Over the years, we have leveraged your goodwill and helped inspire change in communities across the country.

San Diego, CA: Mark Strickland, one of an estimated 3.5 million homeless Americans, participated in the ABA Homeless Court Program and received the legal services he needed to reconnect with society.

Atlanta, GA: Vicki Wright, an employee of Coca-Cola legal department, volunteered at the Atlanta Community Food Bank as part of the ABA National Pro Bono Celebration.

Dayton, Ohio: Ebony Davenport became one of 20 remarkable scholars to receive the ABA Legal Opportunity Scholarship, which awards diverse students with $15,000 in financial aid to attend law school.

We are deeply grateful for the generous support of our donors. Thank you for being the one to make a difference.

Very truly yours,

October 21 at 6:00 a.m. EDT

SAN FRANCISCO — In this midterm election season, it may not be good to be a Democrat — but it is very good to be Hillary Rodham Clinton.

The presumptive Democratic front-runner for 2016 is among her party's best assets to raise money and energize voters amid a gloomy election landscape for Democrats this fall, and she is campaigning hard even on behalf of apparent lost causes.

As a pair of events this week in California illustrated, Clinton's efforts to raise money and get out the vote for Democratic congressional and gubernatorial candidates often dovetail with her own political agenda. Her first political season after stepping down as secretary of state has combined political boosterism for Democrats — including in key presidential states — with high-dollar fundraising and lucrative paid speeches.

The appearances give revealing clues as to what kind of candidate Clinton might be in two years — emphasizing women's issues and striving to thread the needle between her hawkish, centrist history and the more liberal base that rejected her in favor of Barack Obama in 2008.

Here in San Francisco on Monday, Clinton gave a spirited call to arms to Democrats as she road-tested what is likely to be her economic message if she runs again. The November midterms, she said, come down “to a simple question: Who's on your side?”

She sounded close to her party's populist marrow when she decried the erosion of economic security for many working Americans, and a long way from her tone-deaf remark earlier this year about being “dead broke” when she and Bill Clinton left the White House in 2000.

“It's time to elect leaders who will fight for everyone to get a fair shot at the American dream,” Hillary Clinton said, adding proudly that more than 100 women are running as Democratic candidates for Congress this year. “I can't think of a better way to make Congress start working for American families again than electing every last one of them.”

Clinton was the headliner at a Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) event billed as the “Ultimate Women's Power Luncheon,” with ticket prices ranging from $500 a person to $32,400 per couple, for a total of $1.4 million raised. House minority leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) was the undercard. Organizers said about 800 people attended.

Pelosi, who was speaker before Democrats lost the House in 2010, joked that while that made her the highest-ranking woman in U.S. politics, “I'd like to give up that title.”

If Clinton runs, Pelosi added, “she will win.”

On Monday night, Clinton was the big draw for an A-list Hollywood event hosted by DreamWorks Animation chief executive Jeffrey Katzenberg and director Steven Spielberg, among others. The dinner, benefiting the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee (DSCC) and other groups, was closed to the press. Tickets cost $32,500 per person — the federal limit for donations to a national party committee.

Clinton has campaigned in Colorado, Kentucky, Nevada, Michigan, New York, Florida and elsewhere in support of Democratic Senate, House and gubernatorial candidates in the past month. She also hosted a fundraiser for the DSCC at her Washington home Sept. 9, lent her name to an e-mail fundraising appeal for the DCCC on Sept. 22 and held numerous strategy discussions with party leaders this fall.

For the next two weeks until Election Day, she has announced appearances with Democratic gubernatorial candidate Gina Raimondo in Rhode Island and Martha Coakley in Massachusetts, as well as for Senate incumbents Mark Udall in Colorado, Kay Hagan in North Carolina and Jeanne Shaheen in New Hampshire. Democrats said other appearances are likely, including in important presidential states Iowa and Pennsylvania.

Clinton's busy itinerary sets her apart from another former U.S. senator — onetime foe and former boss President Obama — whose recent unpopularity has kept him sequestered in the deepest-blue districts during midterm season.

"I wouldn't want to be a Democrat relying on Hillary Clinton and Nancy Pelosi's help 14 days before an election where the Hillary-Pelosi-Obama policies from the stalled economy to foreign policy and a general sense of chaos are the central theme," said Republican National Committee spokeswoman Kirsten Kukowski.

Appearing with Pennsylvania Democratic gubernatorial candidate Tom Wolf in Philadelphia two weeks ago, Clinton began articulating the themes of strengthening the middle class and reducing pay inequity for women that she returned to here in California.

Such campaign events serve to flex her own campaign network muscles while building support and indebtedness among national and state party Democrats who may have deserted her in 2008.

"Hillary Clinton's work on behalf of candidates in the midterm fits multiple priorities," including her own preparations for 2016, said Ange-Marie Hancock, a professor of political science and gender studies at the University of Southern California.

And for Democrats this year, Hancock said, "it is important because Clinton is incredibly popular among target voters who are less likely to turn out during midterm elections — young people, African American and Latino voters."

On the stump, Clinton drops hints about her potential candidacy, usually with a joke, but keeps the focus on the candidates at hand. She has made no major news and kept her appearances gaffe-free after missteps during interviews promoting her memoir "Hard Choices" this summer.

In her paid speeches, including one less than a week ago at a Silicon Valley tech conference, Clinton appears relaxed and confident. She didn't flinch when a heckler yelled insults through a bullhorn as she addressed the American Academy of Pediatrics in San Diego last week, playing the event for a laugh. "You know, there are some people who miss important developmental stages," she said with a smile to the doctors' group.

Visiting a Denver coffee shop with Udall on Oct. 13, with news cameras in tow, Clinton playfully asked the barista about the artful depiction of a leaf in the foam of Udall's espresso drink.

"Is that a marijuana plant?" she exclaimed with a loud laugh.

It wasn't, but the easygoing exchange and knowing reference to Colorado's marijuana legalization suggested a sure-footedness that Clinton sometimes lacked during staged events in 2008. Several people who know Clinton well have remarked that she seems more at ease in public now, more like the engaging, funny person they say they see when the cameras are off. It is a testament to the legendary power of the Clinton political machine that none of those people wanted to discuss her style on the record.

A Clinton aide said she is relying on the recommendations of the Democratic national and state committees and on the White House when choosing where to campaign. Much of her effort thus far has been on behalf of Senate candidates, as Democrats face the likelihood that they will lose their slim Senate majority in the Nov. 4 vote.

"She's done some fundraising for the House side," with more to come, the aide said, "but the focus has been on trying to hold the Senate. She's a former senator, so it makes sense."

As to whether such events have any spillover benefit for Clinton's own potential candidacy, the aide demurred. He requested anonymity to discuss Clinton's closely held schedule and priorities.

"The focus really is on 2014. There's not an enormous amount of looking to the future," the aide said. "It's about what makes the most sense for now."

Former president Bill Clinton is keeping a similarly busy midterm schedule, but Hillary Clinton's position as a likely presidential candidate makes her an equal or even greater draw for money and party enthusiasm, several strategists and party officials said.

"Both are uniquely equipped to multiply money and turnout," said DCCC Chairman Steve Israel, who said Clinton's fundraiser for New York and New Jersey Democrats last month was "standing-room only."

He dismissed the notion that her prominence as a drawing card puts a finger on the scale for her if she decides to run for president in a few months.

"The only downside to Hillary Clinton appearing at a DCCC fundraiser is that you need a room large enough," Israel said in an interview. "It's indisputable that many people want her to run, but even in the absence of her candidacy she's still Hillary Clinton. She's a historical figure, and one of the biggest draws in American politics."

Over 70% of college graduates in America leave school with student loan debt, and I was one of them. Last year, the average amount of debt per student was $29,400 – which is a lot for anyone to saddle, especially a twenty-two year old.

To be clear, I wouldn't trade my college experience for anything. It was absolutely invaluable and has enriched my life in ways that I haven't even realized yet. But, like most valuable things, it came with a price.

And that price continues to rise. In fact, college tuition rates have risen faster than inflation every year since 1981. When you add to this equation the major cuts in state funding and the increasing number of college enrollees, you get what Hillary Clinton recently called "one of the biggest problems we have in the country." To address this problem will require a combination of efforts from colleges and universities, state governments, and student loan lenders. And the federal government must also do its part.

The federal government's Pell Grant program provides grants based on a student's financial need. Unlike loans, Pell Grants do not have to be repaid. However, the amount of Pell Grants has not kept up with the rise in college tuition costs, requiring students to borrow more. In fact, the value of the maximum grant available at the average four-year public university fell from approximately 80% in the 1970s to just 31% last year.

Congress must continue the fight to strengthen the Pell Grant program, just as Hillary Clinton did in the Senate, when she fought to restore $270 million for the program that was cut during the Bush administration and introduced a bill to allow students to receive two Pell Grants a year instead of one.

Trust me, when you've taken out as much debt as me and my friends, you're willing to work for any help you can get to pay it off, which is why service programs like AmeriCorps are becoming increasingly popular. AmeriCorps offers loan forgiveness, cancellation, or grants in exchange for community service work. It was created in 1994, and since then, over 800,000 people have participated in the program, totaling over one billion hours of service all over the country.

It's a win-win situation – at least when both sides live up to their end of the bargain.

For AmeriCorps volunteers, Hillary Clinton made sure government fulfilled its end of the bargain by pushing a bill through Congress to guarantee that every volunteer gets their education award. Teach for America, the program I joined, can only afford to give educational awards to some of its participants, and as luck would have it, I did not make the cut.

I obviously value education or I wouldn't have dug myself into this financial hole for mine, but I also want to help the next generation of young people pursue an education of their own, which is why I joined Teach for America in the first place. As a 7th grade math teacher at STRIVE Preparatory School in Denver, I'm doing what I love to do. The education award would just lift some financial burden off of my shoulders.

Most importantly, knowing that the federal government is doing all it can to address the increasing student loan debt in America would help reassure that I am not passing along the wrong message to my own students when I encourage them to strive for a college education. After all, I don't want that message to end in their financial downfall.

Huffington Post: Women Must Vote for Democrats in 2014

By Adrienne Elrod

October 20, 2014 5:05 p.m. EDT

As we approach the final days leading up to Election Day, the important role women must play in this election has never been so clear. As women continue to break down barriers and advance in society, there is a steadfast group of lawmakers and politicians who are hell-bent on putting policies into place designed to hold women back. With so much at stake, women must make their voices heard loud and clear that we won't stand for attacks on our rights, economic security, or healthcare. And the best way to get this point across is by voting.

To really put into perspective what's at stake for women, the progress women have made in the following five issue areas could be adversely impacted if Republicans take control of the Senate.

1. Equal Pay

The data on the wage gap is clear: a woman in the workplace today makes 78 cents for every dollar a man makes. This means if a man and a woman are doing the same job, at the same company, with the same title, that woman is, on average, making three-fourths the income as her male counterpart. As absurd and backwards as this may seem, many Republicans continue to deny that women are facing these types of discriminatory barriers.

Case in point: just last month, Senate Republicans unanimously blocked the Paycheck Fairness Act, which would have helped make sure women are paid equally for equal work. Their excuse? Many Republicans pointed to the Equal Pay Act, which was signed into law in 1963!! It's time for these laws to be updated so we can put an end to the wage gap once and for all.

2. Minimum Wage

Republicans recently made it clear that they think it's perfectly reasonable for a person to live in America today on an annual salary of $14,500 in their refusal to raise the federal minimum wage from $7.25 an hour to $10.10 an hour.

Raising the minimum wage isn't just an economic issue, it's a women's issue. How so? Women are disproportionately affected by a low minimum wage because, simply put, women comprise a large majority of minimum wage earners. Additionally, women hold the majority of jobs that work on tips, earning even less than a livable wage.

Raising the minimum wage to an actual LIVABLE wage would not only better support women and their families, but would strengthen the economy. A recent study by the Economic Policy Institute estimates that raising the minimum wage to $10.10 an hour would grow our GDP by $22 billion and create roughly 85,000 net new jobs.

Seems like a no brainer, right? Republicans don't think so.

3. Health Care

Earlier this summer, the Supreme Court ruled in one of its most controversial decisions as of late that for-profit companies can refuse to pay for their employees' contraception, as mandated under the Affordable Care Act, if they object from a religious standpoint. How did Republicans react to this decision? They not only jumped up and down and applauded it, but they even introduced a bill in the Senate reinforcing the decision!

And speaking of the Affordable Care Act, Republicans have tried - unsuccessfully - more than 50 times to repeal the bill, a bill that has and continues to expand health care access to women.

4. Supporting Families

This is such a broad topic that encompasses so many issues that it's best summed up in the words of Hillary Clinton, who recently said, "the Democratic Party is at its best, just like America is at its best, when we rally behind a very simple but powerful idea: family."

And she's right - the Democratic Party has always been the Party focused on supporting and strengthening families. Democrats led the effort to pass the Family Medical Leave Act, the Violence Against Women Act, and expand Medicaid and early childhood education programs, just to name a few. Make no mistake - every single one of these programs would be impacted if Republicans hold the power in both chambers of Congress.

5. And last but not least...we need more women

Women represent more than half the population, but hold less than 20 percent of the seats in Congress. Government should reflect the people it represents. We need more women to be elected officials. And more women are elected when more women vote.

Democrats have a history of sitting out the midterms. Maybe it's because in their minds, a lack of a presidential race means this election doesn't matter. Or maybe their frustration with the gridlock in Washington has turned them off. But with so much hanging in the balance, sitting out this election cycle is extremely dangerous - especially for women.

While leaders like Hillary Clinton are crisscrossing the country, preaching the fact that this election is between Republicans and "leaders who will fight for women and girls to have the same opportunities and rights they deserve," those words of warning and encouragement are in vain unless women get out there and exercise their constitutional right at the ballot box.

Women...get out there and vote.

[Subtitle:] The event brought together Clinton and Obama supporters from 2008

Three generations of Birmingham family women turned out on Monday to see House minority leader Nancy Pelosi and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton rally for female Democratic candidates.

"It was fabulous, a wonderful event," gushes Alanna Birmingham, 17, clutching one of the lunch's floral centerpieces, a keepsake for her to take home. "You could just feel the energy in the room, all this beautiful female energy." Birmingham was there with her mother and grandmother in a show of political unity the family hasn't always enjoyed, especially when it comes to Hillary Clinton—and they weren't the only ones.

Billed as "The Ultimate Women's Power Luncheon," the event raised $1.4 million for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee from the 820 mostly women in attendance bringing the DCCC's money lead of its GOP counterpart to a whopping $38 million with just two weeks to go before the election. The event also featured a set by singer Carole King (including a rendition of "Sweet Seasons" where she changed the lyrics to "Some times you win; sometimes you win" instead of lose).

But the 2014 midterms, where Dems are expected to lose seats in both chambers and possibly control of the Senate, were not the elections on most women's lips at the lunch. Cynthia Birmingham, Alanna's mother, was there to show early support for Clinton's anticipated 2016 presidential bid, in part to make up for not supporting her primary candidacy in 2008. "I'm so excited to support Hillary in 2016," she says.

Birmingham wasn't the only one. California Reps. Anna Eshoo, Zoe Lofgren, George Miller and Barbara Lee—all close allies of Pelosi—were all in enthusiastic attendance on Monday and all endorsed Obama during the primaries in 2008. Indeed, many saw then Speaker Pelosi's call in 2008 on super delegates to respect the will of the voters in their home states, rather than endorsing the candidate of their choice, as one of the nails in the coffin of Clinton's candidacy. Though Pelosi very carefully never endorsed either candidate in 2008.

The event was a healing one for the Birminghams as well. Ann Birmingham, Alanna's grandmother and Cynthia's mother-in-law, was also in approving attendance, happy to see her women kin supporting the candidate she's long adored. "I loved and supported Hillary back in 2008 and I will love and support her in 2016," Ann says. "I was terribly disappointed when she lost."

But all that was forgotten on Monday with Clinton and Pelosi hugging and kissing onstage and united in their common cause to not only elect more women to Congress, where women make up less than 20%, but to start a women's empowerment movement in politics. "When women succeed, America succeeds," both women—and the crowd—chanted over and over throughout the program.

"For too many women, for too many families they don't just face ceilings for their dreams," Clinton said, referring to the 18 million cracks in the glass ceiling, or the 18 million Americans who voted to make her the first female Democratic presidential nominee in 2008, she famously referenced in her concession speech, "they feel floor has collapsed beneath their feet."

Clinton lavished praise on Pelosi's ground-breaking leadership as the first female speaker, a post she held from 2006 until Democrats lost the House in 2010. And Pelosi started her speech saying she hoped she would soon be surpassed. "I'm frequently introduced as the highest ranking woman in U.S. office; I'd like to give up that title. And soon," she told a roaring crowd. "If Hillary Clinton, mother and grandmother, decides to run for president she will win... and she will be one of the best prepared leaders, one of the top presidents in the Oval Office. That she happens to be a woman is a bonus and a wonderful, wonderful thing. But she happens to also be a leader of visions and values."

Indeed, Cynthia Birmingham says she's supporting Clinton this time around because she's an experienced, proven leader at a time when the country most needs that experience. "No one else in the field even comes close," she says, "Hillary just blows them all away. It's not so much that she's a woman, but that she's the best person for the job."

Hollywood Reporter: Hillary Clinton Hollywood Fundraiser Nets \$2.1M for Democrats

By Tina Daunt

October 20, 2014 8:42 p.m. EDT

Tickets to the Brentwood dinner featuring Clinton sold for $32,400 per person, but donors also were given the option of contributing up to $211,200 to the Democrats' Grassroots Victory Project 2014 in a last-minute push to beat the Republicans

Former Sec. of State Hillary Clinton's ultra-elite Hollywood fundraiser at Tavern restaurant in Brentwood on Monday raised $2.1 million for Democrats in tight Senate races, The Hollywood Reporter has learned.

Tickets for the dinner, co-hosted by Jeffrey Katzenberg and Steven Spielberg, sold for $32,400 per person, but donors also were given the option of contributing up to $211,200 to the Grassroots Victory Project 2014, a joint fundraising committee authorized by the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee to benefit candidates around the country, making the fundraiser the largest of the season.

In April, a U.S. Supreme Court decision struck down campaign contribution limits that prevented donors from giving more than $123,200 to candidates, political party committees and political action committees per two-year election cycle. The decision also nixed limits on contributions to parties and PACs, making way for super-sized joint fundraising committees, like the Grassroots Victory Project.

According to campaign finance reports, Grassroots raised $1.3 million during the July through September reporting period, with Boston-based investor Ian Simmons accounting for the single largest donation of $150,000. Now, with Hollywood's deep pockets focused on the group, expect the names of industry bigwigs to turn up in the next filing.

An invitation to the Clinton event, obtained by THR, singled out a number of Hollywood favorites as beneficiaries. They included Kentucky candidate Alison Lundergan Grimes, Georgia candidate Michelle Nunn, West Virginia candidate Natalie Tennant, Colorado Sen. Mark Udall, Alaska Sen. Mark Begich, Arkansas Sen. Mark Pryor and North Carolina Sen. Kay Hagan.

The event's lengthy list of co-chairs included Walt Disney Studios chairman Alan Horn and wife Cindy, Casey and Laura Wasserman, and LiveNation CEO Michael Rapino and wife Jolene Blalock. Also attending the event were Cameron Diaz, Eva Longoria and Jim Parsons.

Katzenberg introduced Clinton to a crowd of about 60 people at Tavern, where the former secretary of state talked about the importance of keeping a Democratic majority in the Senate to implement immigration reform and other key Obama initiatives. Although Clinton did not specifically talk about whether or not she would seek election in 2016, people in the room treated her like she was already running, according to one source.

Deadline: Hillary Clinton Raises Record \$2.1M At Jeffrey Katzenberg Co-Hosted Hollywood Fundraiser

By Dominic Patten

October 20, 2014 8:39 p.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton tonight told a room full of Hollywood heavyweights that the midterm elections are very important to make sure the Democrats retain the Senate so they can move forward on "important issues like immigration reform." What she also told the 60 or so guests in attendance is, to use some of the introductory remarks by co-chair Jeffrey Katzenberg, is "the amazing drawing power" of the former Secretary of State. A fact not lost on anyone as tonight's event raised $2.1 million for Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, a fundraising record.

The presumptive predominant 2016 Presidential candidate was the headliner at a Brentwood fundraiser co-hosted by big Democratic 2014 Variety Power Of Women Presented By Lifetime - Roaming InsideParty bundler Katzenberg. The DreamWorks Animation boss and his wife Marilyn were joined at event sponsored by the DSCC by fellow co-chairs and big donors Casey Wasserman and Laura Wasserman, Steven Spielberg and Kate Capshaw, Disney Studios chairman Alan Horn and Cindy Harrell Horn, and Live Nation president and CEO Michael Rapino and Jolene Rapino. Katzenberg's political consigliere Andy Spahn and Jennifer Perry were also co-chairs. Although named on the invite that went out last week for tonight's 6 PM starting event, Spielberg and Horn was not actually at the fundraiser. Big time Dem supporter Cindy Harrell Horn was as were the Rapinos and the Wassermans. Avengers director Joss Whedon was there, sources say. Also there was long time Democratic supporter Eva Longoria, Big Bang Theory's Jim Parsons and Cameron Diaz.

DSCC Chair Sen. Michael Bennet spoke first followed by the DWA boss who praised the "success of the evening." Clinton then spoke and took questions from the paying audience.

Clinton herself didn't bring up her assumed Presidential run in two years tonight sources tell me but Hillary's return to the White House and the campaign trail was on the minds and lips of LA and DC powerhouses today. Earlier in the day at a Clinton headlined fundraising lunch in San Francisco, former House Speaker Nancy Pelosi told the crowd that if the former First Lady does decide to run for President, "she will win." An industry attendee at tonight's event told me "the person I saw tonight acted like and was treated like an anointed Presidential candidate." Clinton "worked the room like her hat was already thrown into the ring," he added.

California's senators Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer were both supposed to be attendance with their former Senate colleague. However while the latter was there , the former was not. Boxer was also at the Ready For Hillary Super PAC fundraiser September 21 the Pacific Palisades home of Homeland producer Howard Gordon and his wife Cami that raised cash for a Clinton 2016 campaign. Though she has been to LA for speaking and charity events since leaving the State Department last year, tonight's fundraiser is Clinton's first direct cash-seeking event outside of a stop last October for her longtime pal, former DNC chair and now Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe.

With top tickets for tonight's dinner, reception and a photo with Clinton going for $32,400, the fundraiser for the Grassroots Victory Project 2014 was held at the upmarket Tavern restaurant on San Vicente Blvd, as Deadline revealed earlier this month. Attendees were also able to give $211,200 to Grassroots directly. While the ever present gaggle of protesters were there and Clinton's visit to LA came with a very apparent security force, it did not have the sweeping Service Service road closures causing traffic chaos like President Obama's trip 10 days ago for a fundraiser at the home of Gwyneth Paltrow.

In line with the recent visits by Vice President Joe Biden and Obama, Clinton's Hoovering up of Hollywood dough comes midway through a multi-state foray with the Congressional midterm elections looming. Before arriving in LA this afternoon, Clinton was in San Francisco earlier today and raised $1.4 million for the DCCC. Tomorrow she is in Colorado tomorrow and Massachusetts on Friday among other stops in the tried-and-true pattern of a candidate looking to gather chits to cash in later. Speaking of cash, the financial support of Katzenberg and other Hollywood deep pockets is another fundamental component of any Clinton 2016 run – support the ex-NY Senator clearly has at this point.

Among her previous stops on the campaign trail over the past month, Clinton stumped for Kentucky Senate hopeful Alison Lundergan Grimes last week. The Grimes campaign has special significance for the primary host of tonight's event as Katzenberg has made unseating Senate Minority Leader and Kentucky's current senior senator Mitch McConnell his primary aim of this year's midterms. To that end, the DWA CEO has contributed the maximum allowed to the current Bluegrass state Secretary of State's coffers and has introduced Grimes to other big Tinseltown donors at fundraisers in both LA and NYC.

Clinton of course needs no introduction.

AURORA, Colo. (AP) - Hillary Clinton is coming back to Colorado.

The former Secretary of State was in town last week for a fundraiser for embattled Democratic Sen. Mark Udall. On Tuesday she will headline a get-out-the-vote rally for Udall, Gov. John Hickenlooper and Democratic congressional candidate Andrew Romanoff.

Clinton has been traveling the country helping Democratic candidates recently. And if she runs for president in 2016 she will need the support of Colorado voters to reach the White House.

Colorado Democrats have emphasized their get-out-the-vote operations as ballots arrive in voters' mailboxes. Under a new law that Democrats pushed through the legislature voters can mail in ballots or drop them off at polling places. Citizens can register to vote up until Election Day.

Democratic Gov. Pat Quinn and Republican challenger Bruce Rauner will kick off the final, frenzied two weeks of campaigning before the Nov. 4 election with the help of some political star power on Tuesday.

Quinn is scheduled to appear in Chicago with former President Bill Clinton, while Rauner will tour the state, including an afternoon stop in Rockford with New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a possible 2016 presidential contender.

Clinton's visit come on the heels of President Barack Obama's return to Chicago to stump for Quinn, where he headlined a rally Sunday at Chicago State University to mark the start of early voting, then cast his ballot on Monday. First Lady Michelle Obama and former Secretary of State and possible presidential candidate Hillary Clinton helped raise money for Quinn earlier this month.

Christie, meanwhile, has been a frequent sight on the campaign trail with Rauner, hosting several fundraisers and shaking hands at restaurants across the state.

The parade of political celebrities visiting Illinois demonstrates what's at stake: Republicans see a way in after years of Democratic control, while Democrats are going all-out to prevent the potential embarrassment of losing the governor's mansion in Obama's home state.

Clinton will speak at Wheatland Tube on the Southwest Side in an economic-themed event. Rauner has used the economy as a frequent point of attack on Quinn. Christie will appear at Dial Machine in Rockford as part of Rauner's statewide tour to promote early voting.

On Wednesday, Vice President Joe Biden is scheduled to appear at an early voting rally with Quinn running mate Paul Vallas, U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin and U.S. Rep. Brad Schneider at the Sullivan Community Center in Vernon Hills. Durbin faces Republican state Sen. Jim Oberweis and Schneider has a rematch against former Republican U.S. Rep. Robert Dold.

Quinn and Rauner hit the campaign trail following the final televised debate on Monday night in which the two unleashed negativity on each other for most of an hour. Quinn ecried “savage cuts” in a Rauner budget, while the Republican challenger repeatedly branded the Democratic chief executive a “phony” and a “failure.”

The forum provided the Democratic governor, seeking a second elected term, and the Republican nominee, seeking his first elected office, one last free appearance to try to persuade voters as each campaign spends tens of millions of dollars on negative broadcast attack ads.

Together, the two campaigns have raised nearly $80 million — $55.8 million by Rauner and $23.3 million by Quinn — since Rauner entered the race in March 2013. Rauner has personally given his campaign $20.1 million, including another $1.5 million reported to the State Board of Elections earlier Monday.

Rauner was able to criticize Quinn throughout the debate while keeping an even tone. But Rauner, who has run his campaign based on his business success, stumbled when asked to name a business investment that led to increased jobs in Illinois. Rauner did not list a single company, pointing the audience to the web site of his former GTCR investment firm, saying it lists “hundreds of companies for everybody to see.”

Quinn evaded a question — posed at different points by the journalists on the panel and Rauner himself — on whether he would try to make permanent the 2011 income-tax increase he signed if he loses the governor’s race. Rauner said Quinn should take no action if he loses the election.

In that scenario, Quinn would be a lame-duck governor acting before the new governor took office. Quinn wants to make that tax hike permanent, though the personal rate is supposed to roll back from the current 5 percent to 3.75 percent in January.

“I’m in favor of making sure we maintain our income tax level but at the same time provide solid property tax relief to every homeowner in this state,” said Quinn, who has proposed a $500 per homeowner property-tax rebate plan that went nowhere in the General Assembly.

For his part, Rauner vowed to put a half-billion dollars of additional funding into the state’s education system by “cutting wasteful spending and having a growth economy.” Accusing Quinn of “massive wasteful spending, corruption and cronyism,” Rauner said the savings from curbing corruption could lead to increased funding for schools.

“We have a massive economic failure in Illinois. Gov. Quinn, he’s running on scare tactics,” said Rauner, who added that the Democrat “can’t run on the truth. The truth is Illinois is failing on jobs, failing on taxes.”

But Quinn said Rauner was “going around Illinois telling a lot of tall tales” about how the Republican would be able to cut taxes while boosting funding for schools and public works.

Statement

We are deeply saddened by the passing of our dear friend, Oscar de la Renta. His singular talent and exquisite taste elevated American fashion, and his warmth and friendship will be missed by our family and all whose lives he touched in his extraordinary journey.

Oscar's remarkable eye was matched only by his generous heart. His legacy of philanthropy extended from children in his home country who now have access to education and healthcare, to some of New York's finest artists whose creativity has been sustained through his support.

We will always be grateful to Oscar for the love he showed us, and for sharing his talent on some of the most important occasions of our lives. And we will never forget the joy, adventure, and beauty we shared with Oscar, his beloved wife, Annette, and their family during our many happy times together, especially those spent in his beloved Dominican Republic.

We join his family and many friends and admirers all over the world in mourning his loss, while also celebrating his beautiful and joyous life.

Político: Clintons, Bushes honor Oscar de la Renta

By Jonathan Topaz

October 21, 2014 6:09 a.m. EDT

Bill and Hillary Clinton, as well as former First Lady Laura Bush, are paying homage to fashion designer Oscar de la Renta, who passed away late Monday.

"His singular talent and exquisite taste elevated American fashion, and his warmth and friendship will be missed by our family and all whose lives he touched in his extraordinary journey," the Clintons said in a joint statement.

Bush also released a statement praising de la Renta, who designed dresses both for her and her daughter, Jenna, for whom he made a wedding dress in 2008.

"We will miss Oscar's generous and warm personality, his charm, and his wonderful talents," Bush said in a statement. "My daughters and I have many fond memories of visits with Oscar, who designed our favorite clothes, including Jenna's wedding dress. We will always remember him as the man who made women look and feel beautiful."

Jenna Bush Hager, now an NBC News correspondent, also paid tribute to de la Renta. I'm thinking of this man today and my heart is broken," she wrote on Twitter Tuesday morning. "So honored that I knew and loved him."

Both Hillary Clinton and Laura Bush wore de la Renta dresses to their husbands' respective second inaugural balls. The designer had made outfits for every first lady in the U.S. since Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

He has also dressed Arizona Sen. John McCain's wife Cindy, who wore a de la Renta dress to the 2008 Republican National Convention where her husband accepted the presidential nomination, and longtime Hillary Clinton aide Huma Abedin when she married former New York Rep. Anthony Weiner in 2010.

Most recently, he had been critical of Michelle Obama for shunning his designs and wearing dresses made by foreign designers. Earlier this month, the first lady wore an outfit designed by de la Renta at the White House Fashion Education Workshop.

De la Renta died at 82 at home in Connecticut, according to a family statement. There was no specified cause of death.

CNN: Clinton family remembers Oscar de la Renta

By Dan Merica

October 21, 2014

Washington (CNN) -- Oscar de la Renta was known for being a designer to first families, and the Clintons were no exception.

The famous designer -- who died at 82 on Monday -- designed a number of dresses for the former first lady, including her 1997 gold lace inaugural dress and a plum gown she wore to her daughter's 2010 wedding.

Early on Tuesday, the Clintons remembered de la Renta as a "singular talent" whose "exquisite taste elevated American fashion."

"Oscar's remarkable eye was matched only by his generous heart," said a statement from Bill and Hillary Clinton, and Chelsea Clinton and Marc Mezvinsky. "His legacy of philanthropy extended from children in his home country who now have access to education and healthcare, to some of New York's finest artists whose creativity has been sustained through his support."

The Clintons were also personally close with de la Renta. In their statement, the family said they "will always be grateful to Oscar for the love he showed us" and "will never forget the joy, adventure, and beauty we shared with Oscar."

De la Renta, who was born in the Dominican Republic and launched his fashion career in the 1960s, also displayed his work at the Clinton Library in Little Rock during a temporary exhibit in 2013.

Just as effusive as the Clintons were for de la Renta in death, the designer was an outspoken supporter of the Clintons, especially Hillary.

At an April speech honoring de la Renta, Clinton said, "This man has been working for more than 20 years to turn me into a fashion icon. Year in and year out, he's never given up."

De la Renta responded to Clinton in the speech with this: "My beloved Hillary, do not disappoint me. You have to be President, okay?"

Baltimore Sun Opinion: Is Panetta's hit on Obama a boon for Hillary?

By David Horsey

October 21, 2014 6:00 a.m. EDT

Did Leon Panetta really conspire with Bill and Hillary Clinton to undermine Barack Obama by writing a memoir that slams the president's leadership skills and foreign policy acumen? That's what political strategist Dick Morris claims.

"I think Hillary put him up to it," Mr. Morris said in a recent interview on a radio talk show in New York City.

As the man who famously allowed a call girl to listen in on his conversations with President Clinton back in the 1990s when he was a White House political advisor, Mr. Morris is an expert on this kind of inside-the Beltway intrigue. He notoriously wrote a damning tell-all book about the Clintons after his relationship with the prostitute became public and he was expelled from the president's inner circle.

Now, Mr. Panetta, President Obama's former secretary of defense and director of the CIA, has written his own revealing book, "Worthy Fights." While not as sensational as the Clinton book Mr. Morris penned, Mr. Panetta's volume does not make his ex-boss look good. Mr. Morris seems to have no doubt about why Mr. Panetta chose to critique the inner workings of the administration at this particular moment, rather than waiting until Mr. Obama leaves office.

"What Panetta is doing is a hit -- a contract killing -- for Hillary," Mr. Morris said. "Panetta at core is a Clinton person, not an Obama person. By accurately and truthfully describing the deliberations in the (Obama) cabinet, he makes Hillary look better, and he makes Obama look worse. ... And I think he'll get his reward in heaven."

Heaven, of course, would be a Clinton restoration in 2016. Mr. Obama's current low popularity and alleged weakness on foreign policy could be a drag on Hillary's expected presidential campaign. The current conventional wisdom in the pundit class, a view that Mr. Morris spins to its most extreme, is that the Clinton camp wants to put a lot of distance between Barack and Hillary.

If true -- and it probably is -- Ms. Clinton is hardly the only Democrat running away from the president. In the current congressional campaign, Democratic candidates all across the country have been disassociating themselves from Obama. A prime example is Alison Lundergan Grimes, the Kentucky secretary of state who is running to topple Minority Leader Mitch McConnell from his Senate seat. Ms. Grimes has twisted herself in knots to avoid saying she ever voted for Mr. Obama and she would probably go into hiding were the president to visit Kentucky to campaign on her behalf. But on Wednesday Ms. Grimes was perfectly happy to share a stage with Hillary Clinton, who flew in to stump for her. The two of them joined raised hands and grinned for the cameras as if they were running mates.

Centrist Democrats, such as Mr. Panetta and both Clintons, who are nearly as hawkish on defense and foreign policy as Republican neoconservatives, believe Obama's rush to get out of Iraq was a mistake. In his book, Mr. Panetta echoes the same charge against the president as that made by conservatives -- that he should have worked harder to force the Iraqi government to allow the U.S. military to retain a presence in Iraq. The total withdrawal of American forces, Panetta says, created a power vacuum that has been filled by the marauding battalions of Islamic State.

Pushing his book last Sunday on the CBS news show "Face the Nation," Mr. Panetta said the U.S. airstrikes against Islamic State militants will not be enough to roll them back. Only boots on the ground can do that, the ex-Defense and CIA chief said, and Mr. Obama is wrong to foreclose the possibility that those boots will be worn by Americans.

"I don't mind presidents who have the quality of a law professor in looking at the issues and determining just exactly, you know, what needs to be done," Mr. Panetta said. "But presidents need to also have the heart of a warrior. That's the way you get things done, is you engage in the fight."

I'm not nearly as cynical as Dick Morris, so I do not think Mr. Panetta is writing and saying these damaging things about Mr. Obama because the Clintons put him up to it. Still, he is quite effectively opening the way for Hillary to become the candidate with a warrior's heart. This is tricky business for Democrats, though, because no matter how much it may help a Clinton campaign in 2016, Mr. Panetta is presenting a case that could be a winning argument for plenty of Republican candidates this November.

By Jason Stein

October 20, 2014

Former President Bill Clinton will stump in Milwaukee Friday for Democratic candidate for governor Mary Burke.

Clinton, who won Wisconsin twice, will seek to boost Burke's candidacy as she runs a tight race against GOP Gov. Scott Walker, who has himself won two statewide elections here.

10/18/2016

Burke spokesman Joe Zepecki made the announcement, saying that her campaign hoped to have more details on the campaign event on Tuesday.

OWENSBORO, Ky. (AP) -- Former President Bill Clinton returns to Kentucky on Tuesday to campaign with Democratic Senate hopeful Alison Lundergan Grimes two weeks before the election.

Clinton is scheduled to hold campaign rallies in Owensboro and Paducah on Tuesday. It will be Clinton's third visit to Kentucky this year, and it follows a visit last week from Hillary Clinton in Louisville in front of thousands of people.

Large crowds have also flocked to Bill Clinton's appearances, a sign the Clintons are still popular in a state that has voted for them a combined three times for president. Grimes has used her association with the Clintons to distance herself from Democratic President Barack Obama.

Republican Sen. Mitch McConnell is scheduled to have six campaign stops in five eastern Kentucky counties on Tuesday.

Subject: Pick up the phone right now

John --

This week, thousands of Americans picked up the phone to help the President prevent a tax hike on middle-class families.

We can't stop now. Republican leadership in the House of Representatives is still refusing to allow a vote on a bill that would prevent 98 percent of American families from paying higher taxes next year.

If your taxes go up by more than $2,000 in a couple weeks, there's only one reason: because a few dozen Republican representatives refuse to ask the wealthiest 2 percent of Americans to pay their fair share.

You can do something about it. Log on to the call tool today and ask fellow supporters who live in Republican districts to call their representatives now:

<http://my.barackobama.com/Call-Tool>

Voters have already made their voices heard on this issue. As the President said at his first press conference after the election:

"If there was one thing that everybody understood was a big difference between myself and Mr. Romney, it was, when it comes to how we reduce our deficit, I argued for a balanced, responsible approach, and part of that included making sure that the wealthiest Americans pay a little bit more.

"I think every voter out there understood that that was an important debate, and the majority of voters agreed with me ... by the way, more voters agreed with me on this issue than voted for me."

Yet a handful of Republicans in the House of Representatives are still fighting for the same top-down approach that's been tried -- and has failed.

Whether you voted for the President or not, he's fighting to keep taxes low for 98 percent of Americans and 97 percent of small businesses, because he believes we need to grow the economy from the middle out.

He's fighting for you. He's got your back.

We've got to get his, too. Make a few calls right now. One person reaching out to another is how we re-elected Barack Obama. It's how we'll win this fight, too. Just a few minutes of your time will make a difference.

Thanks for doing your part. More soon.

Team, as promised, here is a revised draft outline for the launch speech. This was a quick revision obviously, but hopefully you'll find it reflects the main thrust of our discussion. Please send any final edits or suggestions by 10pm. Then we'll send on to HRC so she can begin thinking about it with us. And of course this is just the beginning of what I hope will be a highly collaborative process.

John,

Tonight at midnight is our most important fundraising deadline of 2015. I can't say this loudly enough.

I'm spending my day trying to close out the year on a strong note. We are so close. Right now we are $5400 away from crossing our overall fundraising goal for the year.

Every dollar you contribute will put us closer to going over that goal: please send \$100, \$50, \$25, or even \$5!

The last few months I met hundreds of people who believe in us and this campaign to CHANGE Congress. Your support by MIDNIGHT TONIGHT will ensure that we can continue to get our message out and win this election in 2016.

Click here to chip in \$25 before midnight tonight and help us reach our goal.

Thank you for your support, and happy new year!

John -- Went back to the IC and informed them that the brief is on for 06 Nov - unless they have something absolutely pressing the need relay Obama on 05 Nov in which case they can contact us and we'll set it up.

The next qs are duration, location, and time of day. After talking to the IC, I'll put out the following recommendations as a starting point:

Duration: 1 hour (for the first session), shortening for subsequent briefings.

Location: The residence

Time of day: morning is preferable for a # of reasons

Best,

I'm so glad you liked the CCDD video, I had a really fun time writing it and am thrilled it blew you up on twitter.

On a slightly different note, I read that Hillary's digital campaign team is hiring, which sparked my interest. I think there is so much that can be done for Hillary through comedy and would love to share some ideas I have with your campaign team.

The internet is a forever changing beast, as I'm sure you know. My goal has always been not only to make people laugh, but to get them to think in the process, which is why I am no longer at Funnyordie full-time.

I continue to work with FOD on a project to project basis and am also working with Jill Soloway's Wifey TV. Jill, the creator of Transparent on Amazon, was just named one of Time's top 100 most influential people and is all about women's empowerment through comedy.

Through my experience and connections with Funnyordie, Wifey TV and my general love of making fun of Republicans, I feel as though I could be a good fit for the Hillary campaign, depending on its needs.

If anything, I will start a campaign to get Rubio to open up a Rubio's franchise instead of running for president. That is my campaign promise.

Hope all is well and I look forward to speaking with you.

Subject: "HILLARY SHOULD TAKE LIE DETECTOR TEST" SAYS ALLEGED CLINTON SEX ASSAULT VICTIM

Hi there,

My name is Iain Dey. I am the New York Correspondent for The Sunday Times, the British newspaper.

I have been talking to Kathleen Willey, one of the women who has accused President Clinton of sexually assault for many years.

She has challenged Secretary Clinton to take a lie detector test - in front of Chelsea and baby Charlotte - while answering questions about her husband's alleged sexual attacks.

I wanted to give Sec Clinton a chance to respond to that suggestion.

Before you tell me, I know that were attempts to discredit Kathleen at the time. She also admits that she previously lied to the FBI, but she has explained to me her reasons for doing so - which make sense.

Her story is the same - that Pres Clinton grabbed and groped her in a room adjacent to the oval office after she went to ask him for a job.

She also claims to have been subjected to extensive harassment and death threats immediately before she gave a deposition in relation to the Paula Jones case. She believes this to have been instigated by the Clinton camp at the time, but obviously has no proof.

If there is any response to any of this please respond as soon as possible. I am now on deadline.

Sorry to spring this, but I have only spoken to Kathleen this morning.

Many thanks
Iain Dey

Subject: draft HRC media plan - for tuesday discussion

Attachments: July message and media plan 062915.docx

Friends – as I note in the actual plan, this is a conceptual document for discussion only. It is overly inclusive, but wanted to cast a wide net for purposes of discussion. Reax, welcome! JP

PROPOSED MEDIA PLAN – JULY THROUGH SEPTEMBER

Press Engagement Theory: Our goals are to 1) increase overall visibility and ability to make our case; 2) engage with outlets watched by primary voters and coalition voters; 3) cultivate serious print reporters and columnists; 4) use non-traditional outlets that will showcase HRC's personality.

Goal of one HRC national press interaction once a week.

Ongoing interaction with locals.

Focus on serious print reporters and columnists.

Begin non-traditional interviews - Daily Show, Skimm & digital platforms (need to add).

Hit AA and Hispanic outlets once in this period.

Seek to do tv interview with each network by end of Sept – tie them to policy announcements.

Proposed Media Plan: July through September

Below is a conceptual plan for press engagement for discussion. It is purposefully overly inclusive for the purposes of discussion. Actual plan can be pared back. Press requests are in bold, policy announcements are in bold and italics.

Week of June 29

July 4: New Hampshire parades

Local print interviews

National and local media avail, post-parade

Week of July 6

July 7: Economic Framing Speech, Pittsburgh/Philadelphia or Des Moines

Print Roundtable

Ron Brownstein, Nina Easton, John Harwood, Ezra Klein, Catherine Rampel

OTR with Mark Leibovich (T) (he is writing a NYT magazine piece – is sympathetic)

July 10: Likely FEC report date for quarter two

Week of July 13

July 13: Wall Street Reform Speech, New York

Roundtable with columnists

July 14: Congressional caucus meetings, DC

July 16: College Refi, New Hampshire

Daily Skimm interview (embargoed to July 22)

10/18/2016

National and local media avail

July 17: Iowa Hall of Fame Dinner – Contrast

July 18: Arkansas JJ

Week of July 20

July 22: Daily Show (T) (day is currently held for Finance events)

July 23: AA Mayors, South Carolina

National and local media avail

John,

It's been quite a while since we've had a chance to catch up.

It's JJ, and I hope you are doing well.

I wanted to reach out to you regarding the next step in my career.

I recently ended my relationship with New Signature, where I focused on client retention and growth. My position was Director of Strategic Accounts, and I managed their biggest, most critical clients. These clients included AARP, Lowy Institute for International Policy, Direxion Investments, Albright Stonebridge Group, and Inside Higher Ed.

I don't want to take too much of your time so here are some quick highlights to consider:

- I was the Director of Strategic Accounts for almost three years, and in my final year mostly focused on sales, outperforming all other sales employees.
- My goal, no matter whom I'm interacting with, is to always provide the best possible experience. I do this by listening, communicating, education, accuracy, quality, and an ethical approach to business.
- I managed a team of four designers and engineers. We operated in a highly collaborative environment. At separate times all New Signature engineers approached the chief operating officer to ask if they could report to me directly.

It is my intention to find a new position as an Account Director, or something similarly aligned with these skills.

If you have time for lunch or just a coffee in the next couple of week I would greatly appreciate the time.

Attached is my resume for your review.

Yours,

JJ

Mesa Refuge
A place for writing at the edge

Geography of Hope is one of northern California's most exceptional literary gatherings, organized by Point Reyes Books. The biennial Geography of Hope Conference brings together leading writers and activists in the coastal village of Point Reyes Station for a three-day feast of readings, discussions, and activities to inspire and deepen an understanding of the relationships between people and place.

"We are proud that the two co-chairs and five of the presenters at this year's Geography of Hope conference are Mesa Refuge alums. The concept of "Women and the Land" runs very deep through the work that has been produced at the Mesa Refuge," says Susan Page Tillett, Executive Director of the Mesa Refuge. Participating Mesa Refuge alumni include co-chairs Robin Wall Kimmerer and Kathleen Dean Moore along with Kat Anderson, Wendy Johnson, Melissa Nelson, Lauret Savoy and Rebecca Solnit.

A fierce compassion for the well-being of the Earth illuminates the writing of both Robin Wall Kimmerer and Kathleen Dean Moore and helps deepen an understanding of the relationship between people and place. They will be joined by a dozen or more of the country's most admired writers who also use language-whether poetry, fiction, or literary non-fiction-to express a sense of urgency about environmental concerns.

Maybe I'm overthinking this but it just hit me as a bit off this morning.

Hi all -- here's a draft for tomorrow in Charleston. This is kind of a hybrid event -- it's got a labor angle, but there will be a bigger audience there, and SC would like her to talk more broadly about the campaign.

So this starts with a strong labor message at the start. Then it goes into the stump. There's a bit in there about Charleston and guns. Otherwise, a lot of this should look familiar to all of you. Perhaps more importantly, it tracks with what she's been saying recently so it'll look familiar to her.

This Hillary Clinton attack on Bernie Sanders makes no sense

By Chris Cillizza March 10 at 12:23 PM

Hillary Clinton went after Bernie Sanders on just about everything during the 8th Democratic presidential debate on Wednesday night in Miami. Immigration. Healthcare. The auto bailout. There were hits and there were misses. But, one strand of Clinton's broad strafing of Sanders made zero sense: That the Vermont Senator is somehow a secret friend to Republicans and conservative major donors.

Here was Clinton on immigration :

In 2006, when Senator Sanders was running for the Senate from Vermont, he voted in the House with hard-line Republicans for indefinite detention for undocumented immigrants, and then he sided with those Republicans to stand with vigilantes known as Minute Men who were taking up outposts along the border to hunt down immigrants.

So I think when you were running for the Senate, you made it clear by your vote, Senator, that you were going to stand with the Republicans. When you got to the Senate in 2007, one of the first things you did was vote against Ted Kennedy's immigration reform which he'd been working on for years before you ever arrived.

And Clinton casting Sanders as in the pockets of Charles and David Koch :

I guess Senator Sanders, that the Koch brothers, as you said, are sensible with how they use their money. And I agree with you. They stand for things that I find abhorrent, that would be bad for our country, bad for our future.

But they did just put up a little video praising you for being the only Democrat who stood with the Republicans to try to eliminate the Export/Import Bank, which has helped hundreds and hundreds of companies here in Florida be able to export their goods and employ more Floridians. So from my perspective, you sided with the Koch brothers.

Here's the thing: No one -- and I mean no one -- thinks that Sanders is on the side of "hard-line Republicans" or that he of the millionaires-and-billionaires-are-ruining-our-politics riff thinks the Koch brothers are great and takes their side on, literally, anything.

The attack that works on Sanders -- and Clinton has pursued this line too -- is that he is full of pie-in-the-sky proposals that sound good but are not based in anything close to reality. That Clinton believes in many of the same things Sanders espouses but has the added value of knowing how to move the levers of powers in order to actually get things done. That what Sanders says sounds good but simply cannot be done -- and reflects a deep and dangerous naïveté about the political process.

But, it's hard to see how anyone -- Clinton supporter, Sanders supporter or undecided Democrat -- would be convinced that Sanders is a liberal in name only or a fair-weather liberal. In the recently-released Georgetown University School of Public Policy Bipartisan Index , Sanders ranked as the single least bipartisan senator in the chamber. The second least bipartisan? Ted Cruz. And no one on planet Earth would accuse Cruz of being a secret enabler of liberals.

My guess is that Clinton's attack, strategically speaking, was an attempt to show how Sanders's quirkiness -- he was the only Democrat to vote against the Export-Import Bank, for example -- puts him outside the mainstream of Democratic thought. That his commitment is not to core Democratic principles but rather to his own vision and beliefs. And that such a politician represents a too-unpredictable variable to take a chance on in the 2016 presidential race.

I get it. I just don't think it will work. Sanders is a liberal's liberal. Attacking him as something short of that only hardens his support and makes Clinton look like she is all politics, all the time and the facts be damned.

Subject: Tammy Duckworth Under Attack Again

About | Our Candidates

Dear John,

We had no illusions that Tammy Duckworth would get to Congress without a fight, but now a right-wing Super PAC is airing a million dollars worth of ads against her.

CLICK HERE TO HELP TAMMY LEVEL THE PLAYING FIELD

We need to step up for Tammy, right now. The airwaves are being flooded to tilt the race to the man who denigrated her service, time and time again.

There is not a second to waste, here. We have to ensure that Tammy has the resources she needs to level the playing field. You've stepped up for Tammy, raising over $62,000 for her. Now is the time to put her over the top. Let's do this.

HELP TAMMY DUCKWORTH FIGHT BACK

We know everyone is asking you for money, right now. We know times are tight. But imagine not donating, and waking up the day after election day to news that Tammy Duckworth lost a razor thin vote. If you donate a little now, you can help to keep that from happening.

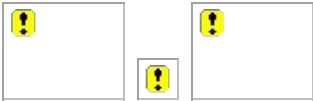

So let's stand beside Tammy, and see her to the finish line!

Subject: Mark Kirk's despicable ad

John -

As an Army helicopter pilot, Tammy Duckworth lost both of her legs and severely damaged one her arms when her Black Hawk was shot down by a rocket propelled grenade in Iraq.

She's a hero.

That's why it's absolutely unfathomable that Mark Kirk, a man with a history of embellishing his military record, would run attack ads accusing her of being soft on terror ... of making it easier for ISIS to attack the United States. It's rhetoric right out of the Donald Trump playbook.

Make Mark Kirk pay for his despicable campaign ad by making a \$3 contribution to Tammy Duckworth's U.S. Senate campaign today.

Mark Kirk led the fight to stop a diplomatic deal with Iran and has consistently put his campaign ahead of his country in his work as a U.S. Senator. Let's send him packing and elect Tammy Duckworth to the Senate.

Friend, tomorrow night may be the biggest moment of the election to date.

It's the first debate, and the first time voters will see Governor Quinn and Bruce Rauner going head-to-head.

That means it's also the best chance yet to show your friends and family what's at stake in this election, and the clear choice they have.

Take a minute to share this promo with your friends -- then tune in tomorrow night:

For more than a year, Bruce Rauner has been ducking reporters and dodging questions about his business record, his stance on the issues, and his plans for Illinois. He even tried to get out of debating Governor Quinn altogether.

But tomorrow night, he'll have nowhere to hide.

Rauner will have to come clean about his shady business dealings, his plans to slash education funding, and his social agenda.

I bet he wishes he could write himself a fat check to get out of this one, but he can't.

When voters see the Governor standing next to Bruce Rauner on stage, I think the choice is going to be crystal clear. That's why it's so important that people watch.

Get your popcorn ready.

What about adding in the community mtg.

The community meeting is about hearing from people directly. Listening and learning from people who have been affected and who are trying to help.

Revised with a new point from Marlon:

Why are you going to Flint on Sunday?

- The situation in Flint is an emergency. For nearly two years, a lot of poor children were drinking poisoned water because their governor wanted to save a buck -- as if their lives weren't worth even that much. As I've been saying for weeks, this wouldn't have happened if these kids were white in an affluent community instead of black in a low income community. If that isn't systemic racism, I don't know what is.
- Every day that goes by without proper testing and care, children are at risk. And I know from work I've done over many years on behalf of children and environmental justice that toxic lead can have terrible effects on kids.
- So I am going to Flint at the mayor's invitation on Sunday to get an in-depth understanding about what is happening and how we can help. We have to fix the pipes and we need to immediately get families the health care and support they need. The federal government is going to have to step up. I know Senator Stabenow is leading the fight to get $200 million to fix Flint's water infrastructure. Congress should do that immediately.
- Let's not forget, repairing trust takes longer than repairing pipes. We have to hold the governor and others accountable. And as a country, we need to take a hard look at all the other Flints out there, all the places where poor communities and communities of color are exposed to environmental danger, government neglect, and corporate abuse.
- A lot of these problems don't get the attention they deserve on the campaign trail, but they're at the heart of what we need to do together as a country. We have to break down all the barriers holding Americans back and take all forms of inequality, including systemic racism and sexism. Slogans aren't going to solve this. We all need to do our part, and we need real solutions that can actually make a difference in people's lives.

Season's Greetings from Democracy!

Dec. 18, 2014

Dear Democracy Reader,

We at Democracy: A Journal of Ideas just wanted to thank you for your continued support.

This was a banner year for the journal. Eight years after its founding, the journal has never been more widely read -- or more essential to progressive discourse. There have been numerous highlights from the past year: Larry Summers's widely discussed review of Thomas Piketty's blockbuster book, Gen. Stanley McChrystal's case for national civic service, FCC Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel on her theory of regulation, Heather Hurlburt on the need to redefine the war on terror, and Gara LaMarche's introspective essay on the role foundations play in our democracy -- to name a few standouts.

There's more where that came from. As President Obama enters the homestretch of his presidency -- and as Democrats wrestle with the loss of the Senate -- progressives more than ever need to think hard about the kind of country and politics we want to see in the years and decades ahead. And we at Democracy intend to play a central role in that process.

As the year draws to a close, please consider giving to the journal. You can be certain that whatever you donate won't be squandered. We pay only three salaries and we have one of the leanest operations in publishing. There are organizations ten times our size that haven't had our impact. So please click here if you'd like to give. Or sign up for a subscription, for yourself or a loved one.

From everyone here at Democracy, I want to wish you happy holidays, and thank you again for making Democracy what it is today.

Sincerely,
Michael Tomasky

Subject: AFL-CIO Math

Hi guys

I wanted to provide you with a updated outlook on where we stand with the AFL-CIO endorsement process. Technically the vote requires unions that represent 2/3 of the 12.5 million member organization to support endorsement. My recommendation is that once we cross 50% we have a delegation of Presidents come to Trumka and ask him to call the vote for HRC. I have outline below where we currently stand with AFL-CIO affiliated unions, these numbers include two union endorsements (AFSCME and IUOE) that I fully expect to happen by October 28th, 2015. I have included recommendations on what is needed to cross the threshold, I believe it lies with the UFCW.

AFT 1.6 million
AFSCME 1.6 million (10/23)
IAM 720,000
IUOE 400,000 (10/28)
UA 340,000
IUPAT 160,000
BAC 50,000
Roofers 30,000
OPCMIA 20,000

HRC Total: 4.9 million
Goal: 6.0 million

Outstanding Unions in AFL-CIO:

Smaller building trades unions outstanding that I think we can get Insulators, Elevator, SMART and Ironworkers=total 389K (I am working these with Monroe)

UFCW 1.3 million
AFGE 670,000
UAW 390,000

We could hit the goal with the remaining building trades + AFGE (but AFGE won't go until mid December). The quicker and more expedited path is thru the UFCW.

Focusing in on the UFCW endorsement, needed next steps:

1. Brooklyn HQ Policy Discussion (I need to set up dates to offer Stuart next week that work for Robby and Maya Harris)-The UFCW will be bringing in their Executive Vice Presidents and key International Vice Presidents for a policy conversation around their industries.
2. It is likely I will need some HRC time with either Marc and/or his Executive Board before the vote. Standard 60 minutes, like other Executive Board convenings.

I'd like to push (with Stuart) the UFCW to move in November. After this endorsement, we set a AFL-CIO endorsement goal immediately to follow pre-Iowa in December/January.

Transportation Antitrust Handbook

A thorough understanding of antitrust issues is critical to the counseling of clients in the transportation industries. The Handbook provides in-depth coverage of antitrust enforcement in the United States and globally. It addresses the evolving role of industry-specific regulators (such as the DOT and FAA) in enforcing the antitrust laws. Written by practitioners in the transportation industries for the antitrust and transportation communities, the Handbook is a must-have reference for counsel active in these industries. Chapters cover topics on antitrust issues in the following industries:

- Motor transportation
- Rail transportation
- Air transportation
- Ocean shipping

Subject: Is this courageous leadership?

Friend,

Have you seen this video?

With just a week until the health and compensation bill for 9/11 first responders was set to expire, Jon Stewart and a group of first responders went to our nation's Capitol to plead with lawmakers to pass a bill to care for ailing responders.

Rob Portman was among just 34 Senators who refused to sponsor the bill to help some of our nation's most selfless heroes.

Despite trying to make an appointment, those first responders were forced to track Senator Portman down in the hallways beneath the Capitol to get his attention. Take a look:

Under immense pressure, Senator Portman eventually agreed to support the bill. But it should never have been this hard. Watching the video made us angry. And it made us more determined than ever to bring new leadership to the U.S. Senate.

Can you imagine Senator Portman avoiding a meeting with the Koch brothers? No. We deserve better. And our first responders absolutely deserve a Senator with an open door, instead of one they had to chase down in a basement hallway.

That's why we're standing with Ted.

Thanks,

Team Ted

I note from the press accounts that Sec. Clinton may be considering a more direct statement on the pending permit application for the KXL pipeline. I have a few thoughts to share for your consideration. I want to point out that I have no professional relationship with the developer of the pipeline so these are my thoughts based on my view that an integrated North American energy/environment policy is in the interests of all three countries and our citizens. (I have done work for Transport-Canada in the past but do not have a current relationship).

- as you probably know there is a federal election campaign ongoing in Canada. The election is October 19. It would be prudent, I believe wearing my former ambassador hat, to avoid being seen to take a position on a high profile issue that could be argued to be intervention in that election. Clearly that would not be her intent but it could be the result. That doesn't mean don't take a position but it may mean wait until the election is past

- there is little doubt that our economy will continue to rely on fossil fuels for some time into the future. If that is correct then the question is how is the most responsible way for the US to do so. Pipelines are unquestionably safer and less damaging to the environment modes of transport for oil than rail. Sourcing oil from Canada is unquestionably better for the US from an environmental, security and economic point of view (much of the material and contractors in the Alberta oil patch are US companies) than getting it from Venezuela or Africa or the Middle East (we still import a substantial percentage of our oil daily).

- the newly elected government of Alberta is a left of center party that campaigned on sensitivity to climate change. They have already acted to raise the levy on carbon (they don't call it a tax) and are looking to accelerate the closer of coal fired electric generating plants (which are on a schedule to close over the next 8-10 years due to federal policy).

- there are so many geo-political and economic positives for North America to have the incremental pipeline capacity, if the reason to be skeptical is climate change (although Canadian policy is pretty good via-a-vis the alternatives) rather than declaring categorical opposition at this stage why not consider indicating conditions (realistic) under which a pipeline would be acceptable. Those conditions would include all the domestic state and local approvals and potentially some additional policies in Alberta (or actual performance) that demonstrates incremental gig improvement-say an additional 10% reduction in intensity around production.

- bottom line, as you know from years of discussion I believe this is important to how we work together in North America. I also believe there is a reasoned way to approach this that addresses the legitimate interests of most stakeholders. The kind of approach I am outlining should show concern for the environment while also demonstrating appreciation for the economic and security considerations. This way Labor and Environmental groups achieve something. I am more than willing to help think this through further if it is worthwhile

- I will be in NY for the Sept 3 meeting so perhaps we can chat.

Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer- Vote Transforms Political Landscape

House Health Care Vote Transforms the Political Landscape

We wake up this morning surrounded by a new political world.

The House vote approving health care reform was without doubt the most significant congressional vote in the last four decades. That's because it completely transformed the American political landscape. It certainly changed America's health care system. But it altered the balance of political power in America as well.

* Fundamental Reform. The House vote, together with the work the Senate will finish this week, will provide health insurance to 32 million Americans, rein in the power of the private insurance industry and end the terror that if you lose your job and get a serious illness you will no longer be able to get insurance. It will ultimately help stop tens of thousands of preventable deaths each year that are caused by the condition known as "no insurance."

* It brought us into the company of every other industrial nation by establishing that from this day forward in America – health care is no longer a privilege or a commodity but a right.

* In the two-century-long battle between progressive and conservative values in our country, last night's victory was momentous. Progressive values now define the fundamental frame of reference for a massive new sector of our economy: health care. After President Bush's victory in 2004, the forces advocating conservative, social Darwinist values tried to take back the territory they had lost in the 1930's by attempting to privatize Social Security. Progressives defeated their efforts – and began to push them back.

Barack Obama's victory in 2008 was like the Normandy invasion – the beginning of a forceful progressive counter-offensive. Today we have secured a whole new massive chunk of real estate.

I do not mean "government control" – far from it. I mean that the terms defining the distribution of health care in America will no longer be exclusively based on the interests of huge private insurance companies. Instead they will be defined by the fundamental understanding that health care is a human right.

As the late Senator Kennedy wrote to President Obama before he died, what was at stake in the health care battle was not "the details of policy, but the character of our country."

The exact structures of the health care reform bill may be modified – and I hope expanded -- to include a robust public option. But the progressive value premise has been established and I do not believe it can be rolled back.

Before the Republicans execute their plan to run this fall on a "repeal the bill" platform, they should take a look at the fate of Alf Landon and the Republicans who, in 1936, ran on the platform of repealing Social Security. They lost big. In fact by the time the Republicans finally retook the White House (16 years later) with Dwight Eisenhower no Republican candidate uttered a word about "repealing" a program that had long since become massively popular.

* This victory has validated President Obama's commitment to making serious change. He came into office promising real, transformative change and he has delivered it. He proved that he – and America – can make big change – address truly fundamental issues.

Many pundits had argued that he bit off more than he could chew. They had said that he should be satisfied with "small change" – shouldn't tackle so many things at once – shouldn't challenge the interests of so many powerful sectors of the American economy. Suddenly his Administration, and the forces that surround it, look a lot smarter than it did two days ago, when the dominant media chatter was about who was to blame for allowing the Obama Presidency to be stuck in the mud. Obama accomplished something that had eluded Presidents for a century – not bad.

* With this victory the entire narrative of the Obama presidency has changed. Health care reform has repeatedly been declared moribund – completely dead after the Scott Brown election in Massachusetts. Obama has brought health care back – like a phoenix -- from the dead. He did it through absolute persistence and clear, unflappable leadership – the same kind of leadership he and his organization exhibited when they were repeatedly counted out during the Presidential race.

He also demonstrated nerves of steel. He bet the political ranch on health care reform and won.

* Last night's vote demonstrated to the American voters that government can work. It has been a central Republican goal for years to show that government doesn't work. Of course the incompetence of the Bush Administration helped validate their premise. But since the election of a Democrat to the White House they have had one key goal: gridlock. The lock has been broken.

* Our victory demonstrated that a special interest as wealthy as the private insurance industry can in fact be defeated. The insurance companies and Chamber of Commerce have spent hundreds of millions of dollars to stop health care reform cold. They lied, they distorted the facts, they threatened. They have failed. That will embolden Democrats – and average Americans – to challenge the power of Wall Street and the Oil Companies, to challenge the power of every other special interest that seeks to promote their private interest at the expense of the public interest.

* The House vote shows that hope can defeat fear. The entire campaign of the health insurance industry and the Right has been built on a foundation of fear – from death panels, to “government takeover,” to “socialized medicine,” to bogus “cuts” in Medicare. Hope won. That has enormous implications for issues like immigration reform.

* The health care victory was a tribute to political courage – the courage of Barack Obama who bet his Presidency on the outcome – and the courage of many House Democrats who took, what they feared would be an unpopular vote.

In fact, I would argue, that by Election Day, there will be very few districts where a vote for health care reform is unpopular. But I would also argue, that this fall we will see clear evidence that courage itself is very popular.

Willingness to stand up for what you believe – and unwillingness to be swayed by political winds – is good politics. People love candidates who are not what they conceive as “typical politicians” that always have their fingers in the air or decide what they believe based on the latest poll.

The fact that many Members stood up tall – took on the insurance industry – and refused to be intimidated – is itself a great political narrative for Democratic candidates this fall.

And I predict that we will also learn the opposite is also true. The Democrats who decided to oppose health care reform because of political pressure – particularly those that voted yes the first time health care reform was considered by the House – will be in deep political trouble.

The flip-floppers will find that they will gain nothing with the hard core opponents of reform, their base will be demobilized, and the flip-flop charge itself will move independent voters to oppose them. Very dumb.

* Last night's victory shows that great organizing works. Credit goes to the millions of members of Organize for America (OFA), MoveOn.org, the major health care reform coalition, Health Care for America Now (HCAN), U.S. Action, the Center for Community Change, the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), The Service Employees International Union (SEIU), the AFL-CIO, the National Education Association, the Center for Community Change, Americans United for Change, The Communications Workers of America (CWA), AARP, the Alliance of Retired Americans, the NAACP, the National Council of La Raza, the National Women's Law Center, Planned Parenthood, the Center for American Progress, Progress Now, Families USA – and scores of other grassroots organizations.

These are real organizations – not the creations of “astro-turf” lobby firms like Dick Arme's “Freedom Works.”

Credit especially goes to organized labor – the bedrock of the progressive forces in America – without which victory was not even remotely possible – as well as progressive funders like Atlantic Philanthropies.

The campaign conducted by the pro-reform forces included everything from phone calls, to grassroots action, to earned media, to lobby visits to Congress, to TV commercials. In many respects it was a model – to be built and improved upon in the future. Though we were outgunned financially by the infinitely deep pockets of insurance industry, we won.

And ultimately victory also depended entirely on a tough, eloquent President to provide the leadership necessary to win.

The end game was particularly masterful. One commentator noted that the President had the Republicans for lunch when he spoke at their own retreat – and he had a seven hour banquet at the “bi-partisan” summit. He used the power of the Presidency to enormous effect to place the Republicans on the defense.

The rallies, the self confidence, and the sense of inevitability that he and Speaker Pelosi brought to the last several weeks – coupled with brilliant one-on-one work with Members of Congress and co-ordination with Administration allies sealed the deal.

* Perhaps the biggest political winner of last night's victory was House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. She showed once again that she is the best political organizer in America. She aggregated the self-interests of hundreds of individual members. She navigated the dangerous shoals of dozens of contentious, divisive issues. She hammered together the votes to win largely out of her own force of will. For her, failure was not an option.

Her organizing skill was complemented by the enormous but understated talents of Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid who convinced his caucus that a reconciliation bill to incorporate the negotiated agreement with the House was the only way to get health care moved. Reid delivered what the House needed – the agreement of 51 Senators to pass the reconciliation bill. Reid will finish his part of the drama this week and – as a by-product -- massively improve his own prospects for re-election this fall.

* Finally, this victory will invigorate the base of the Democratic Party and greatly improve the chances of victory for all Democrats this fall. Let's remember that Democrats lost control of the House in 1994 because Democrats didn't come out and vote after the failure of health care reform earlier that year. Last night's victory will have precisely the opposite effect.

Not only that, but voters like to support winners. Last night the Democrats in Congress, President Obama and the progressive forces in America won big. The Progressive band wagon has been freed from the mud and is moving once again. It will attract more and more followers as we get closer to the Election Day.

There was another big loser last night -- the "chattering class" of pundits. Turned out that health care, the Obama Presidency, and the progressive movement weren't so dead after all.

Pleasure seeing you today with Mr Jairam Ramesh. Really thoughtful of you to make the trip out on to the street to meet us. Much appreciated.

Sharing below the oped Abhijit Banerjee and I wrote on the Post-2015 agenda for New York Times, essentially making the point that you were making today on the need to bring much more focus.

I have been working informally with some of your colleagues at CAP (Molly Elgin-Cossart among others) to drive some of these ideas forward. (I am formally with the World Bank these days helping on sanitation strategy, after spending the last 5 years as Ministerial Advisor to Mr Ramesh). Keen to help further in shaping this agenda in the right direction.

Once again, it was a pleasure.

How to Prioritize U.N. Goals

By ABHIJIT BANERJEE and VARAD PANDE

SEPT. 10, 2014

Cambridge, Mass. — In France, children grow up hearing the story of the 100 times good cake: A cat and a dog preparing a cake start from the idea that if the cake has 100 delicious ingredients, it will be “100 times good.” So they make a cake with strawberries and cream, garlic and pepper (and throw in a mouse and some bones for good measure) — with predictable consequences.

Diplomats are facing a “100 times good” temptation as they work to establish new United Nations global objectives for development, known as Sustainable Development Goals, that will help set an overarching narrative for the world’s progress for the next 15 years.

The diplomats from 70 countries made up an Open Working Group, which recently submitted its proposal. A diplomat from a small Pacific island that faces imminent inundation might, understandably, have focused on the elimination of fossil-fuel subsidies, while one from China or India might have stressed the transfer of environmentally sound technologies to developing countries on favorable terms. By themselves, these are both worthy causes, but a result of accommodating these divergent priorities is a list with 17 goals and 169 targets as metrics for measuring progress toward those goals — a sort of “169 times good cake.”

The previous Millennium Development Goals, established in 2000 with a target date of 2015, set only eight broad goals — like universal primary education, gender equality and environmental sustainability — as priorities for global resources, and just 19 targets.

The power of the original millennium goals came from their very clear prioritization of a small number of measurable objectives. The idea was to present to the world a specific vision that said, “This much at least we should be able to offer every human being.” By emphasizing the sheer modesty of what was being proposed, it made it hard for nation states to ignore the global project.

What is needed now is a clear, concise set of objectives. Without them, the entire project is in very real danger of failing. If nations can simply ignore the imperatives on the grounds that they are too many, too grandiose and too far out of touch with countries’ limited resources and ability to effect change, the development goals will just be another pious hope in the long list of United Nations-sponsored fantasies.

We have some experience of just how difficult choosing priorities can be. We were both involved in the High-Level Panel for the Post-2015 Development Agenda, a group set up by the secretary general that worked in parallel to the Open Working Group. We submitted our report — which will be combined with the Open Working Group’s — in May last year, and despite our attempts to discipline ourselves ruthlessly, we ended up with 12 goals and 54 targets.

Choices have to be made. Some are easier than others: For example, “Devise and implement policies to promote sustainable tourism” (Target 8.9 in the diplomats’ proposal), laudable as it is as an objective, cannot possibly lay the same claim to our attention as infant mortality or mass illiteracy.

The list of targets could also be shortened by focusing on outcomes and leaving out process or input measures (the current version has both). This has the added advantage of allowing countries to use their limited resources as they see fit. For example, we think it is much better to have a quantitative target for children's learning (e.g., by 2030, X percent of children should be reading or doing math at their grade level) than to require them to "increase by X percent the supply of qualified teachers" (Target 4.c in the working group proposal), especially given the lack of evidence that teacher training as currently delivered has much effect on children's learning.

Moreover, the goals and targets should be as specific, measurable and actionable as possible. For example, Target 12.2 in the proposal asks countries to "by 2030 achieve sustainable management and efficient use of natural resources." Who would argue with that, but what does it actually require countries to do other than to say amen?

Finally, our report indicated some issues that apply to many goals. Inequality was one. The idea was that for a range of goals, countries would have to measure and report the outcomes — for example, infant mortality — for the poorest X percent (say, 20 percent) of the population, in addition to the average.

This is where we find a lot of the historically disadvantaged populations (the Roma in Europe, "scheduled tribes," as the indigenous people in India are known, African-Americans) and help bring some attention to subpopulations without focusing on ethnicity directly.

It also makes it harder for countries to concentrate just on people close to the poverty line and ignore those far below and points to overlooked communities in the richest countries.

The United Nations General Assembly has its work cut out. It must balance ambition with practicality. It must devise a tight agenda for the world to collectively strive toward — and remember that more ingredients do not always make the best cake.

Subject: Draft Email From Bruce for Editing

John

I am going to go see Bruce around noon today - not sure what your schedule is but if convenient, it may make sense to meet there together.

Even as everything was going on with Dorothy, CVC was emailing me saying she had new worries that review can't take a month; to get an email out from Bruce to staff re your availability to provide gap support/leadership, and desire to talk later today about her newest two worries. I had an hour call with Doug late last night, who is experiencing CVCs concerns as effort to ensure he and Justin no longer provide the support they do now for the President; he spoke with Terry McAuliffe last night who shared this concern and that what is needed is for folks to get calmed down and good decisions made.

Below is a draft of an email I will run by Bruce when I am over at the hospital with him - can you share any suggested edits or changes so you feel comfortable?

thanks.

Dear Foundation Staff

(email to direct staff and senior leadership of all the affiliated initiatives):

First, I want to thank all of you for the well wishes for my swift recovery. I am getting better and I am looking forward to being back in the office.

Until I am able to return to the office full-time, the President and I have asked John Podesta to serve as a special advisor to support me and the Foundation staff in our work. He has graciously agreed to be available by phone and email, as well as to be in the office periodically, to help provide leadership. Please seek his guidance and decision-making as necessary to ensure the work of the Foundation continues apace while I am out.

I am counting on you to continue to do what you do well – support President Clinton's vision for how we can combat climate change, through CHAI equal the challenge of HIV/AIDS and malaria, support a healthy eating and fight childhood obesity, promote economic opportunity and enable sustainable development in service of our mission to strengthen the capacity of people throughout the world to meet the challenges of global interdependence.

Once I am settled into a routine, I will update you on when I am available to address matters that might be more efficient for me to handle.

Again – thanks for all the good wishes.

Ethan, Dan and I spent more time than anyone would have liked dealing with this vaccine silliness today, namely the focus that the right was pushing on a questionnaire HRC and Obama filled out in '08 where they each similarly hedged on an answer about the link between autism and vaccinations, leaving the door open to the possibility.

Below is the most significant piece that was filed so I wanted to flag it. What stood out about today is that the reporters I talked to were less focused on the perception of a flip flop so much as that their takeaway from the tweet last night was that she's not worried about catering to every constituency so much as being authentic and constructive, or as Dan called it, the Happy Warrior.

As to this piece, thanks largely to Ethan's research which we conveyed to Karen, this gives a pretty straight accounting of HRC on the topic.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/politics/vaccine-debate-presents-a-political-minefield--as-hillary-clinton-can-attest/2015/02/03/1fa7fc4c-abc7-11e4-ad71-7b9eba0f87d6\_story.html

Vaccine debate presents a political minefield — as Hillary Clinton can attest

The latest tweet from Hillary Rodham Clinton sounded straightforward enough: "The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork."

But the issue of vaccinations has long been politically and emotionally fraught — involving not just public health but also the proper role of government, the prerogatives of parents and medical riddles that have yet to be solved.

Probably no one in public life today has felt those crosscurrents more strongly than the presumed front-runner for the 2016 Democratic nomination. On the issue of vaccination over the past two decades, Clinton has repeatedly found herself on the front lines of advocacy and criticism.

Other politicians — including potential GOP presidential hopefuls Gov. Chris Christie (N.J.) and Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) — have been learning those political lessons the hard way in recent days.

Both made statements questioning whether childhood vaccinations should be mandatory, bringing a torrent of criticism, including from medical professionals who are alarmed over a recent rise in measles cases.

As a new first lady in 1993, Clinton championed what became the Center for Disease Control and Prevention's Vaccines for Children program, designed to provide free inoculations against nine diseases to children who otherwise might not get them. It now covers 14 diseases.

Clinton's role in that endeavor landed her in the crossfire. Conservatives blamed her when shortfalls of some vaccines developed in subsequent years, arguing that the private market was better at allocating resources. "One of her pet projects is a bust," the conservative Wall Street Journal editorial board wrote in a 2003 piece headlined "Hillary's Vaccine Shortage."

Meanwhile, Clinton also found herself the target of a burgeoning movement that linked the rising rate of autism to thimerosal, a mercury-containing preservative that has since been removed from childhood vaccines. Some advocates of this theory went so far as to dub her "Thimerosal Hillary."

For reasons that scientists cannot explain, the incidence of autism is up markedly. Last year, the CDC estimated that 1 in 68 children aged 8 had been identified with the range of conditions known as autism spectrum disorder. That was about 30 percent higher than previous estimates, reported in 2012, of 1 in 88 children.

Clinton, as a presidential candidate in 2008, wrote in response to a candidate questionnaire: "I am committed to make investments to find the causes of autism, including possible environmental causes like vaccines. . . . We don't know what, if any, kind of link there is between vaccines and autism — but we should find out."

Her then-rival, Sen. Barack Obama (D-Ill.), also called for more research into whether there was some correlation. And 2008 GOP presidential contender John McCain (R-Ariz.) went so far as to say there was "strong evidence" of a connection between vaccines and autism.

But even in 2008, the weight of medical evidence was against such a link and the candidates who indulged such speculation were accused of pandering.

In 2010, the argument against vaccination received a devastating blow from the Lancet, a medical journal that 12 years before had published a study alleging that inoculations for measles, mumps and rubella were a cause of autism. The journal retracted the study, saying the supposed research had been falsified.

Another iteration of the vaccination issue flared in the 2012 Republican primary campaign, when then-Gov. Rick Perry of Texas found himself under fire for a mandate requiring most girls in his state to get inoculated against the human papillomavirus, a sexual infection that can lead to cervical cancer. Some social conservatives argued that it would encourage girls to have sex.

Republican leaders have not welcomed the rekindling of the vaccine debate sparked by Christie's comment Monday that parents should have "some measure of choice" in deciding whether to vaccinate their children. Paul — a physician with a libertarian philosophy — joined the argument with an unfounded claim that there are "many tragic cases of walking, talking, normal children who wound up with profound mental disorders after vaccines."

Paul took to Twitter on Tuesday to defend himself, saying he supports vaccinations and posing for photographs as he received a booster shot .

“I did not say vaccines caused disorders, just that they were temporally related — I did not allege causation,” he wrote in one tweet.

House Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) sought to tamp the furor down by saying Tuesday, “I don’t know that we need another law, but I do believe that all children ought to be vaccinated.”

Meanwhile, several other potential 2016 contenders distanced themselves from Christie and Paul.

“Absolutely, all children in America should be vaccinated,” Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) said Tuesday. “Unless their immune [system is] suppressed, obviously, for medical exceptions, but I believe that all children, as is the law in most states in this country, before they can even attend school, have to be vaccinated for a certain panel.”

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) also released a statement criticizing “fear mongering” and added, “Personally, I would not send my kids to a school that did not require vaccinations.”

Not sure I have any definitive thoughts on this. The NSF person struck me as particularly problematic since he was being considered for the agency review team examining NSF. I wouldn't particularly have a problem with him analyzing another agency. I guess the theory on Hill staff is that there's an inherent conflict having a Hill health staffer analyzing HHS and helping shape our health policies since that person would later have to interact with an Obama administration on the same issues. I suppose it would be less problematic if a Hill health staffer were tapped to examine the FCC, but of course, that would never happen.

Given that we have limited the participation of Hill staff, I assume we are applying the same standard to other current government employees, yes? This has come up with the agency review team and an NSF employee. It strikes me as a conflict. Thanks.

Hi all -- here's the final draft for tonight. Regular, large and prompter versions attached.

I will send this now to the separate chain with the prompter operator.

Thanks everybody.

Mandy, the edits you asked for don't really apply anymore... though I'm happy to make any changes you or anyone wants, for ease of cutting a video.

I'd like to go final with this in an hour or so, so if anyone has any other edits, let me know!

.....In America, no bank should be too big to fail and no executive should ever be too powerful to jail.

But we can't stop there.

We need to get jobs growing and incomes rising. Too many Americans can't find a good-paying job, no matter how hard they try. People haven't had a raise in 15, 16 years.

We need a bold national mission to create millions of jobs in clean energy, manufacturing, and infrastructure.

We need to deal with high student debt and high college costs.

So, yes, Wall Street has too much influence ...and so do drug companies, insurance companies and big oil ...and I will hold them accountable.

But if we were able to get rid of all of their influence tomorrow, there would still be too many barriers for people. We would still have discrimination in all its forms.

I'm talking about African-American families who [, after generations of discrimination,] have just a fraction of the wealth of white families – just $11,000, compared to over $141,000 for the typical white household.

I'm talking about the crisis of so many young black people dying after encounters with police – like Jamar Clark, shot and killed a few months ago, not far from where we sit tonight.

I'm talking about immigrant families lying awake at night listening for a knock on the door, working in the shadows, vulnerable to exploitation by unscrupulous employers.

I'm talking about women still fighting for equal pay. Still struggling to get access to reproductive care, while Republicans go after Planned Parenthood again and again.

This isn't a single-issue country. And we can't afford a single-issue President.

There are so many barriers holding Americans back – and we have to break all of them down.

I don't think our country can live up to its potential unless every single American gets a chance to live up to theirs.

On page 2 after We can't stop there --- We do need to DEAL with the Banks and Wall Street --- I would rather not have the word "talk" associated with Wall Street. I'm fine losing the symmetry between DEAL and talk ---

Bottom of page 3 – last line - All of us know we need real solutions to the challenges we face. But I won't make promises I can't keep. – NEXT GRAPH TOP OF 4 --- STET on first sentence. But in my experience, those days are not the way we make change most of the time. To make change happen over and over again, you've got to keep working, keep fighting day after day and if you get knocked down, get right back up. ,

P 4 3rd Graph We didn't get everything we wanted. We got knocked down. But I got back up and when to work with Democrats and Republicans to find common ground to provide health care to the most vulnerable among us – our children. And today the Children's health insurance program we passed is a lifeline for 8 million kids across America.

WHEN YOU'RE HURTING GRAPH:

I learned from my family and my faith to do all the good you can for as many people as you can as long as you can. And when you see people hurting, or being treating unfairly or unjustly and you think you can help them or make a difference and make their lives a little better --- you've got to do it. I WOULD OMIT THE QUIETER SUCCESS – NOT LANGUAGE THAT PEOPLE USE.

IN NEXT GRAPH , DO FIRST SENTENCE AND THEN FLIP ORDER in next sentence----- ..... Let's take on the drug companies to bring down the price of prescription drugs so many families depend on.

Subject: Trump's tax plan proves billionaire populist really just a billionaire

PATRIOTIC MILLIONAIRES

Friends of the Patriotic Millionaires,

GOP frontrunner Donald Trump released a tax plan he claims is a boon to middle class families, but that actually offers major tax cuts to the wealthiest Americans. The billionaire real estate developer has been portrayed in the media as a billionaire populist, but his new tax plan proves he is really just a billionaire.

Last week, the Patriotic Millionaires have offered clear repudiations of Donald Trump's policies.

Please read the new op-ed below by Patriotic Millionaire Chairperson Morris Pearl, former Managing Director of BlackRock Inc., titled "Tax Plan Proves Billionaire Populist Really Just a Billionaire" in The Hill.

Thank you for all of your support,
The Patriotic Millionaires

Tax Plan Proves Billionaire Populist Really Just a Billionaire Despite the hype, Trump's tax plan is windfall for 1 percent

By Morris Pearl
Morris Pearl is Chair of the Patriotic Millionaires and a former Managing Director at BlackRock

Listening to Republican presidential frontrunner Donald Trump's stump speech about taxes, I was intrigued that his official tax plan might break new ground.

I had hoped that candidate Trump shared my view and that of my fellow Patriotic Millionaires - that our tax system needs a massive overhaul and a fairness adjustment. As he has said on the campaign trail, the wealthiest taxpayers contribute very little to the costs of running the country relative to the good fortune their citizenship has afforded them.

Thanks to the lobbying dollars of narrow corporate interests and wealthy campaign donors, our tax system has been turned into Swiss cheese. Would Mr. Trump truly fix this?

Disappointingly, the true winners of candidate Trump's tax plan are multinational corporations and wealthy taxpayers, including Mr. Trump, his offspring, and me.

Instead of making the wealthy pay their fair share, Mr. Trump slashes the top tax rate by more than one-third. Members of the top 1 percent would receive an average \$184,000 tax cut every year. Taxpayers in the bottom 20 percent would get an average annual tax cut of just $250.

In a gift to wealthy friends and his own family, Mr. Trump proposes eliminating the federal estate tax, which applies to estates worth more than $5.4 million ($10.8 million for a couple). This change alone will give millions of dollars in tax windfall to families like the Trumps. American families without a $10.8 million estate will get nothing -- except the bill to make up for the lost revenue (about \$269 billion from 2016-2025 ).

Instituted in 1916, with support from prominent Americans such as President Theodore Roosevelt and Andrew Carnegie, the estate tax was a response to the grotesque inequalities of power and wealth in the Gilded Age of 1890 to 1920. Is returning to that bygone era what Trump means by "Make America Great Again"?

Trump talks tough about hedge fund managers and offshore tax dodgers, but in the end he gives them a pass. In his call to close the carried interest loophole, Trump said hedge fund managers were "getting away with murder." While his plan does ostensibly close the loophole, it simultaneously lowers the top income tax rate. So under Trump's plan, "the hedge fund guys" will keep on killing it.

Trump tells global corporations to come home, but gives a whopping \$400 billion tax break to existing tax dodgers who have parked $2 trillion offshore. Instead of requiring them to pay the 35 percent (less foreign taxes paid) that they currently owe to the American people, he only asks them for 10 percent. So instead of demanding they pay the $600 billion they owe, Trump is only asking these multinational tax dodgers for about $200 billion and letting them pocket the rest. I would not call that "the art of the deal" for small businesses and domestic corporations that are paying their fair share.

Instead of "Making America Great Again," a Trump tax plan would further concentrate wealth and power in the hands of a few people, including Mr. Trump himself. As former President Carter recently pointed out, our political system is now "an oligarchy with unlimited political bribery."

Moreover, Trump's tax plan is fiscally irresponsible. The conservative Tax Foundation estimates it will cost more than $10 trillion over ten years, even after assuming magical growth that never materializes from trickle-down tax cuts. Instead of additional tax breaks for the wealthy and big corporations, that $10 trillion would be better invested in a New Deal for America's middle class.

Giving the ultra-wealthy another tax break is even more unseemly when we consider the deteriorating quality of our public infrastructure, the unmet needs of veterans in our communities, the falling quality of American schools, and the stagnant wages of most of our citizens. It is in no one's interest, including those of us who will pay higher taxes, to allow our civic and physical infrastructure to unwind any further.

Trump talks a big game about taking on his wealthy peers and helping middle class and struggling households. His official tax proposal calls for the poor to file a one page tax return to the IRS with the words, "I win" written on the form. But if Trump's tax plan becomes the law of the land, he and I will both write "But millionaires (and billionaires) win MORE".

Subject: Dinners at my home on law and technology

Dear John,

I hope all is well. I know how extraordinarily busy you must be with the campaign, but I am writing to see if you will be able to participate in an initiative that is important to me, that I believe is very important to the future of the law center, and that will build on your earlier work at the law center on technology. Working with our technology faculty, I'm planning two dinners at my home (4221 Oakridge Lane, Chevy Chase) for members of our faculty and a small group of others to discuss what the law center should be doing in the technology area in the years ahead. The dinners will be at 6:30 pm on Thursday, October 29, 2015 and on Friday, November 13. I am writing to see if you could participate in one of the two dinners. I anticipate these will be consequential discussions about an issue of fundamental importance, and it would be great to have your participation.

As you may know, this is an exciting time at the Law Center for our endeavors in all things tech. We have recently added new faculty members, created new centers, and expanded our curriculum in innovative new directions. As we add these new pieces to the strong foundation we have long been building, I think we have the potential to become the premier law school in the country for the study of the ways technology is reshaping law, governance and legal practice both in this country and around the globe.

To better organize our efforts, we are in the early stages of creating an Institute for Technology Law and Policy, which we hope to launch this academic year. As we give shape to the institute, it would be great to get your thoughts. How can we best take advantage of our unique strengths, including our proximity and access to policymakers in DC? What important questions in your areas of expertise are law schools neglecting to try to answer? How can we build a network of supporters to help us with the resources we need to accomplish our goals?

In short, I'm asking you to help us imagine the future of technology law and policy and the role of the modern law school in it. I know very well how busy you are, but I realize how much thought you have given this subject, and it would be great if you could make one of the dinners.

Thanks for thinking about this invitation. I hope you are able to join us.

Best, Bill

Dear John,

I am sorry but I will not be able to make it since I am in Australia for two big projects and will be back on July 6. I would like to take this opportunity to invite you to dinner on July 9 at my place together with Tony, whom I already invited. The dinner is at 7:30PM and the address is 497 Greenwich Street, apt 7B.

Please let me know if you can make it.

Warmly, Marina

Dear Law Center Community,

On Wednesday, February 4th, 2015, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg will visit Georgetown Law to deliver the 2nd Annual Dean's Lecture to the Graduating Class. This event will take place at 4:00 p.m. in the Hart Auditorium.

The size of the graduating class is larger than the seating capacity of the auditorium, therefore, we conducted a lottery to determine the students who will sit in the auditorium and this event exceeded capacity.

If you would like to view the Justice's remarks, the event will be simulcast in McDonough 202 and available for viewing on our website at Hillary Clinton has been very open that her views have evolved over the years.

In 2013, she added her voice in support of marriage equality.

Here is what we have: Huffington post is doing a story tomorrow "fact checking" the idea that there was a push for a constitutional amendment in 1996, as HRC claimed was true. The piece will essentially say there was not, and will quote Rosen's tweet and Evan Wolfson saying this was not true and was hardly a basis for DOMA to be signed by WJC.

Xochitl has also gotten an inquiry from the Blade.

In addition to this, Socarides tells us he heard from NYT on this, though the campaign has not, so we do not know what he is referring to. I would not be surprised, however, if activists we're pitching this.

All that said, I do not think a statement from HRC is warranted simply based on these inquiries. Indeed, I think a statement from her likely attracts more coverage than just these inquiries and also could give the appearance that we are responding to Bernie at JJ, rather than clarifying our own remarks to Maddow. I missed the beginning of the conf call this afternoon on this, but i had assumed we were preparing an HRC statement less for HuffPo and more because that is what political thought was needed to quell the LGBT backlash.

If that is not the case, then for my purposes, I would just propose a spokesman statement that accounts for Dan's point (that she will not disavow her theory about the constitutional amendment) but also addresses the community's outrage over the idea that we might be trying to justify support for the law in 96 by saying something like, "Regardless of the differing motives that led to the passage of DOMA, none were justifiable since, as both Hillary and President Clinton have said, the law was clearly discriminatory."

I'm not sure anyone has asked. We would put it out there.

On Friday, and in many instances previously, I was asked about my position on the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). I appreciate that people have differing views of the DOMA situation [other word?] in 1996. The environment for gays and lesbians was different then and there were struggles about the best paths to take. That is common in all social change movements. I have been very open that my own views have evolved over the years.

I hope the important thing is that we are now moving forward toward justice, together. In 2013, I added my voice in support of marriage equality "personally and as a matter of policy and law." As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. I originally flagged HRC's Maddow remarks as potentially problematic in part because her wording closely linked her to two unfavorable policies of the past even as no one in the community was asking her to "own" them. Given that, my recommendation would be to make this statement about just her, her evolution, and her record -- not bring in WJC.

Relatedly, if we release a statement tonight, it will very clearly be in response to the Maddow interview. To the extent we can, I advocate for owning that so that we can clean this up completely, rightly position her as a champion of LGBT issues, and make sure we move on from any discussion of looming amendments or her being involved in passing either DADT or DOMA. Without getting into the weeds, can we say that the broader point is that the country is in a different place now on LGBT issues -- and thank goodness it is -- and that she's so happy each policy has been placed in the dustbin of history?

Last thought: I have raised this a few times to a smaller number of people on this thread but will flag this for the larger group as well. At Keene State College, she specifically cited friends playing a part in her evolution, which we echo here. That's fine, IMO, and quite believable. But if I were a reporter and wanted to keep the evolution story alive, I would start asking which friends she was talking to and ask us to provide them. Not a problem per se, but I think it is worth flagging now so we aren't caught by surprise later.

From Richard:

Since I was asked on Friday about the Defense of Marriage Act in an interview on MSNBC, I've checked with people who were involved then to make sure I had all my facts right. It turns out I was mistaken and the effort to pass a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage came some years later. The larger point I was trying to make about DOMA, however, is still true. It was neither proposed nor supported by anyone in the Clinton administration at the time. It was an effort by the Republicans in Congress to distract attention from the real issues facing the country by using gay marriage, which had very little support then, as a wedge issue in the election. The legislation passed by overwhelming veto-proof margins in both houses of Congress and President Clinton signed it with serious reservations he expressed at the time. Luckily the country has evolved way beyond this in the last 20 years and most Americans, including the Supreme Court, now embrace LGBT equality. We are a better country for it. Although there is much work that remains, and I'm eager to help advance the day when we are all truly equal.

Bill Clinton: It's time to overturn DOMA

The writer is the 42nd president of the United States.

In 1996, I signed the Defense of Marriage Act. Although that was only 17 years ago, it was a very different time. In no state in the union was same-sex marriage recognized, much less available as a legal right, but some were moving in that direction. Washington, as a result, was swirling with all manner of possible responses, some quite draconian. As a bipartisan group of former senators stated in their March 1 amicus brief to the Supreme Court, many supporters of the bill known as DOMA believed that its passage "would defuse a movement to enact a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which would have ended the debate for a generation or more." It was under these circumstances that DOMA came to my desk, opposed by only 81 of the 535 members of Congress.

On March 27, DOMA will come before the Supreme Court, and the justices must decide whether it is consistent with the principles of a nation that honors freedom, equality and justice above all, and is therefore constitutional. As the president who signed the act into law, I have come to believe that DOMA is contrary to those principles and, in fact, incompatible with our Constitution.

Because Section 3 of the act defines marriage as being between a man and a woman, same-sex couples who are legally married in nine states and the District of Columbia are denied the benefits of more than a thousand federal statutes and programs available to other married couples. Among other things, these couples cannot file their taxes jointly, take unpaid leave to care for a sick or injured spouse or receive equal family health and pension benefits as federal civilian employees. Yet they pay taxes, contribute to their communities and, like all couples, aspire to live in committed, loving relationships, recognized and respected by our laws.

When I signed the bill, I included a statement with the admonition that “enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination.” Reading those words today, I know now that, even worse than providing an excuse for discrimination, the law is itself discriminatory. It should be overturned.

We are still a young country, and many of our landmark civil rights decisions are fresh enough that the voices of their champions still echo, even as the world that preceded them becomes less and less familiar. We have yet to celebrate the centennial of the 19th Amendment, but a society that denied women the vote would seem to us now not unusual or old-fashioned but alien. I believe that in 2013 DOMA and opposition to marriage equality are vestiges of just such an unfamiliar society.

Americans have been at this sort of a crossroads often enough to recognize the right path. We understand that, while our laws may at times lag behind our best natures, in the end they catch up to our core values. One hundred fifty years ago, in the midst of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln concluded a message to Congress by posing the very question we face today: “It is not ‘Can any of us imagine better?’ but ‘Can we all do better ?’”

The answer is of course and always yes. In that spirit, I join with the Obama administration, the petitioner Edith Windsor, and the many other dedicated men and women who have engaged in this struggle for decades in urging the Supreme Court to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act.

Think all of us are getting incoming from friends in LGBT community about DOMA comments.

HuffPo has reached out to us. I heard from Socarides that NYT was doing something.

I have no understanding of the issue – but clear this has a head of steam.

Brian can put a statement out, but policy and political need to tell us what you want us to do.

I would suggest a conference call with relevant parties for how we are going to handle all around – press, groups, politics.
I have a bad schedule for rest of day and may not be able to be on such a call but don't think I am needed. We just need guidance and then on political end think we need a plan for how to hose down anxious friends.

Dear Hillary Clinton Supporter,

The Hillary for America campaign has asked me to convene the inaugural meeting of Michigan Women for Hillary. As a woman activist, I hope you will join us for this historic effort! We will gather in Southfield at the Skyline Club, 2000 Town Center, Suite 2800, Southfield 48075, on Friday, June 26th from 5 to 7 pm (doors open at 4:30).

Southfield's very own Congresswoman Brenda Lawrence and our United States Senator Debbie Stabenow will be on hand. We will also be joined by many friends and other elected officials to discuss the important challenge ahead.

Remember this is for Hillary supporters only.

If you have questions, please contact me at jjblanchard2002@yahoo.com or 248-217-1909 or Rachel Koresky at rachel.koresky@deweysquare.com or 313-886-4850.

Please RSVP with Rachel Koresky by June 25th.

Thank you and I look forward to seeing you on the 26th of June.

Happy St. Patrick's Day, Friend—

Can you believe that the legislative session in Virginia just finished?

It's pretty incredible to look back on the journey you and I have been on over the past year. Your groundswell of support brought us to victory in November, and together we just concluded an incredibly productive legislative session during which we reformed the SOLs, repealed the hybrid tax, and took many other important steps forward to grow our economy and strengthen our communities.

There's still more work to be done, though, which is why I called a special session and will continue fighting for access to affordable healthcare across the Commonwealth.

Since you've been with me every step of the way, I want you to be the first to know about my plans to continue moving Virginia forward.

Last week I established a political action committee (PAC) to support like-minded candidates who are dedicated to bringing progressive values to their communities, as well as issues that are in line with our top priorities — investing in education, having a healthy workforce, and growing our economy. The PAC is called Common Good VA, and my team and I are thrilled about this exciting new chapter.

You helped bring common sense back to Virginia last year by electing me as your Governor, but if we are to fully realize the promise of that election, now is not the time to sit on the sidelines. I formed Common Good VA to make sure that the ideas that led us to victory in November don't get lost in the partisan battles being waged in Washington and to ensure that those of you who have been with me every step of the way continue to have your voices heard across the Commonwealth.

Common Good VA is ready to make a difference in your community, so be on the lookout for more details about upcoming events and other ways to be involved.

Thanks again for your continuous support — I'm lucky to have you on my team.

-Terry McAuliffe

Hi John, the Roberts bill was introduced on Friday and it is even worse than what I had expected. Since he appears to have the votes in Committee, this is going to be a MAJOR floor fight that will garner a lot of media and citizen attention in the next three weeks which is obviously a critical time for HRC.

And as I predicted, Bernie has already come out strong against the bill: <http://www.politico.com/tipsheets/morning-agriculture> ...which is going to play very well with his target (millennials). I can't stress too strongly how important it is for HRC to come out strongly against the Roberts bill and for citizens having the right to know and choose whether to buy foods with GMO ingredients. And the sooner she can do this the better, so (a) she does not appear to be lagging too much behind Bernie and (b) because her assertion of leadership in standing up for consumers now would significantly boost citizens' confidence about her readiness to stand up for average folks and address the tough issues.

As for the message, I am more than happy to help frame talking points if you want to send someone my way (a sample of key points is below). But one important thing for you and her to know is that Tom Vilsack's efforts to find a compromise solution have really been pushed aside for now, and so while in Iowa she paid some respect to his idea of a QR code/scanning approach, because of the nature of what Roberts is proposing, that idea is really irrelevant now. This is truly a yes or no issue..as to whether senators will support blocking or supporting citizens rights to know. As I said to her last July, regardless of how she or any of us feel about genetically engineered foods, that is a separate issue from whether or not people have the rights to know and choose whether to buy them for their families. She MUST come out against this asap.

Here are some talking points to consider.

Let me know how I can be helpful. FYI I will be at the NYC finance gathering next week for about 2 hours (3-5pm). I hope to see you then.

Politico: “Chicken soup for the Democratic soul”

By David Nather

November 4, 2014, 5:04 a.m. EST

10/18/2016

When this election is over, the Democrats are going to need a whole lot of healing.

They're staring at the very real prospect of losing the Senate for the first time since 2006. If they somehow manage to hang on, they'll be left with an even thinner majority and more gridlock, as if that was possible. They're sure to lose more House seats, either way.

So they're going to need some good talking points to make their voters — and the donors — feel better. They're going to need some chicken soup for the Democratic soul.

They'll have lots of heartwarming stories to offer. They can talk about how terrible the Senate map was for them this year. They can certainly talk about how much better it will be in 2016, with more Republicans defending their seats in purple states — enough that they might have a real shot at winning back the Senate.

And then, of course, there's the chicken soup with instant healing power: "Just wait until Hillary Clinton runs and all the Republican candidates start beating each other up."

Sooner or later, though, they're going to notice the fly in the soup: two years of lost seats and diminished power — and Barack Obama's presidency running on fumes. There's sure to be finger-pointing as some Democrats blame Obama's plummeting approval ratings. And even if they win some high-profile governor's races, a feature that was supposed to be a highlight of this election, it's looking more likely that they'll lose others and it will end up a wash.

To be sure, if the Democrats hold on to the Senate, the future is a lot brighter. All of a sudden, they'll be talking about building their majority rather than trying to win it back. No matter what happens, though, the next two years on the Hill will be difficult ones — because they'll either be out of power or clinging to it by their fingernails.

Here are the morale boosters Democrats will use to cheer themselves once the election is over:

1. We never had a chance

Democrats have been bracing for a terrible year all along. The seats they're trying to hold are heavy on conservative states like Arkansas, Louisiana, North Carolina, Alaska, West Virginia and Montana.

Midterms rarely go well for the president's party anyway, let alone for someone whose approval ratings are in the low-40 percent range. So it's kind of a miracle for them that the races have been so close, in theory.

But really — Colorado? Iowa? What happened? It's not as if Democrats can't compete in those purple states — Obama won them twice — yet Iowa's Bruce Braley and Colorado's Mark Udall are in serious danger of coming up short. Should they lose, Democrats won't be able to blame the lousy Senate map.

Republicans, who have been through recent election night disappointments of their own, have a bit of advice for the Democrats: If it turns out badly, think about why you lost.

"Excuses are the first stage of grief," said Ron Bonjean, a GOP strategist and former Hill leadership aide. "They did have solid candidates and incumbents, but the fact is that Obama's policies just swamped it out across the board."

2. 2016 is our year

This is one of the Democrats' favorite comebacks: If you think the Senate map was bad to us this year, just look at how bad it will be to Republicans in 2016.

This time, it will be Republicans defending seats in blue-to-purple states: Rob Portman in Ohio, Kelly Ayotte in New Hampshire, Pat Toomey in Pennsylvania, Ron Johnson in Wisconsin, Mark Kirk in Illinois. And it will happen during a presidential election year, when voter turnout is sure to be higher than it is during a midterm election.

"There is an increasing correlation between presidential voting and senatorial voting and gubernatorial voting," said Democratic pollster Mark Mellman. "That means the map is our own worst enemy now, but in 2016, the map will be a very good friend."

Or, as former Obama spokesman Ben LaBolt put it: "They call them election cycles for a reason."

The catch: It's not as if there are no vulnerable Democrats up in 2016. Michael Bennet of Colorado, who squeaked by in 2010, will have to run for another term. And don't forget Harry Reid, who would be in for the fight of his life if popular Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval decides to challenge him.

3. Hillary will save us

The rest of the country may be in suspense, but Democratic consultants really aren't. They have no doubt that Hillary Clinton will be the party's next presidential nominee and that Republicans will be at a big disadvantage because they don't have anyone who's the same kind of natural front-runner — and because they'll tear each other up in the primaries.

"You'd think it would be tough for the party in power to hold on after eight years, but the Republicans are fractured, and the primary process is not going to help their problems," said Democratic lobbyist and Hill veteran Steve Elmendorf.

Democratic pollster John Anzalone put it bluntly: "The chicken soup's name is Bill and Hillary."

This scenario, of course, assumes she won't spend her campaign cleaning up after the kinds of verbal stumbles she's made on the road this year. But if she hits her stride, they believe she'll mobilize the key voting groups that will help Democrats in races around the country.

There's another big benefit, according to Democratic pollster Stan Greenberg: Clinton would be able to give the party's candidates the kind of fully formed "economic worldview" that they can't produce on their own — and help them move forward from the Obama years. "The president is in a different era," Greenberg said, noting that whenever Obama focuses his economic speeches on the recession, "it's like a decade ago."

Some are also convinced that the Republicans will blow it in 2016 by having too many firebrands in the presidential field — like Ted Cruz, Rand Paul and Marco Rubio — and that they haven't really confronted their challenges with changing demographics, especially among unmarried women, African-Americans and Hispanics.

"There's not a snowball's chance in hell that the Republicans are going to win the White House in 2016," said Democratic consultant Jim Manley, a former spokesman for Reid. "That's going to be one of my consolations on Tuesday, depending on how it comes out."

4. The Republicans will have to pass things now

Call them crazy optimists, but there are Democrats who predict that Republicans may govern differently than they campaigned if they win the Senate. After all, if the Republicans don't show they can pass legislation — and put an end to confrontational tactics like last year's government shutdown — their majority won't last beyond two years. That's one reason White House officials are already looking for issues that could be ripe for deals with a GOP majority.

Privately, Republican aides say the same thing — that senators like Ayotte, Portman and Toomey will be looking for accomplishments that can boost their cases for reelection. But that doesn't mean tea party groups and conservative activists will play along. They'll want confrontations with Obama at every turn, sending him veto-bait bills that, in their view, will present clearer choices between the two parties for 2016.

That factor has already become clear with Obamacare, as Mitch McConnell has tried to reassure conservatives that he'll keep fighting to repeal the law, even though Republicans know Obama would never sign it. And House Republicans, who are poised to expand their majority, will have zero incentive to soften their fights with the White House.

5. Hey, look at the governors

The governor's races were supposed to be a bright spot for Democrats in this year's elections, which is one reason Obama put so many of them on his campaign schedule. At one point, there were predictions that Democrats could pick up anywhere from two to four governorships.

That's looking less likely now. Democrats could still win a few morale-boosting races, although one of their best prospects, Florida's Charlie Crist, is a guy who used to be a Republican. But for every governorship they might pick up, they have others that they could easily lose in states that they should have won. (We're looking at you, Martha Coakley in Massachusetts.)

In reality, the Democrats' best bets are in Pennsylvania, where Tom Wolf is virtually certain to defeat Gov. Tom Corbett, and Maine, where Michael Michaud has a good shot at unseating Gov. Paul LePage. After that, they could win toss-up races in Florida and Kansas, but they could also easily lose Democratic Govs. Dannel Malloy of Connecticut and Pat Quinn of Illinois, who are in too-close-to-call races of their own.

So look for Democrats to focus on the close races and hope for the best. Mellman noted that Pennsylvania "almost certainly" will go Democratic, and said the reelection races of two prominent GOP governors — Wisconsin's Scott Walker and Michigan's Rick Snyder — are "still very much in play."

Hillary Clinton made 45 appearances on the campaign trail this year for congressional Democrats, according to her spokesperson, winning gratitude from Democrats as she reintroduces herself to voters in key states ahead of a likely presidential run.

Clinton largely left politics after losing her 2008 presidential race and becoming President Obama's secretary of state. But since early September, she's been crisscrossing the country for Democrats in key races and exceeding expectations. She held fundraisers or rallies for 10 senate, 12 gubernatorial and four House candidates in 20 states.

That includes the key presidential state of Iowa, where she attended the annual Tom Harkin Steak Fry in September and then returned last week to campaign for Senate candidate Bruce Braley. On the second visit, Clinton visited an iconic diner and mingled with voters, humbly reintroducing herself to the state that scorned her in 2008 in favor of Barack Obama. Her husband, former president Bill Clinton, also visited Iowa to campaign for Braley this weekend.

On Sunday, the former secretary of state returned to New Hampshire, a state which has always been good for the Clintons and she won in 2008. Clinton made four stops in the state, which holds the first primary in the Democratic nominating process.

Earlier in the cycle, some Democrats worried she would not lend her star power to the party's candidates in what promised to be a difficult year for Democrats, but campaigns from Pennsylvania to Iowa to Kentucky have been very happy with her efforts.

She's also raised millions of dollars for party committees, which support all Democrats running for the House, Senate, or governor's mansion. Meanwhile, Bill Clinton has also worked harder for Democrats this year than in previous cycles.

Clinton allies say she's motivated by a desire to help Democrats get elected in a tough year, but also privately acknowledge that her campaign work is another sign that she's preparing to run for president in 2016.

Hillary Clinton will be honored by the Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights next month, alongside Robert De Niro and Tony Bennett, according to an invitation for the event.

The event, on Dec. 16, will take place in New York City. Clinton, De Niro and Bennett will be presented with Ripple of Hope Awards, according to the invitation.

The event is one of the few public appearances Clinton has scheduled in the next two months, a period during which she is expected to spend time with her newborn granddaughter, Charlotte, and also talking to advisers and friends as she makes a decision about a second presidential campaign.

Clinton's schedule of paid speeches also appears to have wound down through the end of the year.

Her advisers have been debating whether to lay down a marker on a campaign if she decides to run this year, as opposed to early next year, with some advocating for it but others strongly opposed, according to several people familiar with the discussions. One adviser characterized an early move as unlikely if for no other reason than, for all the activity of outside groups on her behalf this last year, many open questions remain about how her campaign would operate.

**The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "House Dems brace for losses"**

By Mike Lillis

November 4, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EDT

House Democrats are heading into Tuesday's midterms hoping that a swelling of Republican support does not crest into a tidal wave.

Democratic leaders had spent much of 2013 playing offense, with thoughts of defying historic trends and retaking the lower chamber this year. Their optimism reached its apex after last year's government shutdown left the Republicans badly bruised.

But Democrats have run into a perfect storm since then. Incumbents are retiring; the public is anxious about a fragile economy and foreign unrest; the perennial problem of low turnout among left-leaning groups in midterm elections persists; and President Obama's approval rating is near historic lows.

Put it all together and it is perhaps no surprise that Democrats have been forced into a defensive crouch, where their best hope is to stanch the bleeding and prevent a Republican rout.

Party strategists are now focused merely on preventing the GOP gains from exceeding the eight seats Democrats netted in 2012.

"Democrats should be happy if they keep [the number of] losses under double digits," one Democratic strategist said Monday.

Tuesday's outcome will have obvious practical implications. Significant Republican gains would likely help Speaker John Boehner (Ohio) advance his policy agenda in the face of frequent resistance from a Tea Party wing that criticizes GOP leaders as overly centrist and timorous. As indicated by their "Drive for 245" slogan, the Republicans are hoping to net 11 seats.

But the consequences could also carry far beyond the 114th Congress. Many Democrats think they'll have a shot at winning back the House in 2016 on the wings of a strong presidential candidate — say, Hillary Clinton — if they can keep losses this year to a minimum.

"They want to keep this in the realm of a strong Democratic presidential candidate being able to have enough coattails to shift control in 2016," Julian E. Zelizer, congressional historian at Princeton University, said Monday. "If the expansion of the GOP majority is significant, even with a poor Republican candidate in 2016, it will be much harder for Democrats to regain control."

Rep. Jim Moran, a veteran Virginia Democrat retiring at the end of the year, suggested that a large Republican majority could pose its own perils for the GOP.

"If the Republicans get the Senate, and pick up even another half dozen seats in the House, they'll overreach; and they're going to get so far out of the mainstream that there will be a big, critical backlash in 2016," Moran told The Hill. "[That] would enable a presidential candidate as strong as Hillary ... to usher in a wave election with her."

First though, the Democrats have to survive 2014, no easy task in an election year that seems increasingly to be "a referendum on President Obama," in the words of Rep. James Clyburn (S.C.), the third-ranking House Democrat who blamed the party for not doing "a better job messaging exactly what the president has done."

Democratic leaders long ago wrote off several seats currently under their control, including those of outgoing Reps. Mike McIntyre (N.C.), Jim Matheson (Utah) and Bill Owens (N.Y.), three centrists who essentially ceded their conservative-leaning districts to Republicans the day they announced their retirements.

Democrats are also facing extremely tough odds of keeping seats held by Reps. Nick Rahall (W.Va.), Collin Peterson (Minn.), John Barrow (Ga.) and Rick Nolan (Minn.).

They've been frustrated by an inability to put more pressure on Rep. Michael Grimm (R-N.Y.), despite a long list of federal charges pending against him.

And last month they were forced to pull money from several close contests for open seats in order to protect incumbents whose races tightened late in the cycle. Reps. Lois Capps (Calif.) and Steven Horsford (Nev.) were among the Democrats who received first-time cash infusions from the party at the eleventh hour.

There are some bright spots for Democrats, however. They're expected to win the seat being vacated by retiring Rep. Gary Miller (R-Calif.); they have a very good shot at picking off Republican Reps. Lee Terry in Nebraska and Steve Southerland in Florida; they see another pickup opportunity in the West Virginia seat of Rep. Shelley Moore Capito (R), who's expected to win her bid for the Senate on Tuesday; and despite last-minute attacks by outside conservative groups, both Capps and Horsford are expected to win reelection.

Indeed, party leaders insist that every non-retiring incumbent has a fighting chance to return next year. That's a stark contrast to 2010, when they'd written off a number of seats long before Election Day.

Rep. Steve Israel (N.Y.), head of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee (DCCC) said Monday that there are 20 races still too close to call.

"So anybody who tells you that they know what's going to happen [Tuesday] night is literally the last person that you should be listening to," he told MSNBC. "You still have 20 very close races."

Still, party strategists are also bracing for likely losses — and eying the next cycle with relish.

"No matter what happens Tuesday night, the field in 2016 flips dramatically from 2014," DCCC spokesman Josh Schwerin said Monday in an email. "[W]e'll be able to play offense in more seats and Republicans are going to spend the next two years reminding voters that they are completely unable to govern responsibly."

Not everyone agrees the Democrats have a shot at the House in 2016, regardless of the outcome of Tuesday's elections, however.

Michael Mezey, political scientist at DePaul University, said Republicans' redistricting efforts in 2010 mean there's "no chance for the Democrats to regain control of the House until 2022," after the next census.

"Pennsylvania, for example — a reliably blue state — has a congressional delegation composed of 5 Dems and 13 Republicans," Mezey said Monday in an email. "Hillary's coattails, if they exist, are not going to overcome that."

MSNBC: "Meet Staci Appel, Hillary Clinton's top congressional candidate"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

November 3, 2014, 10:16 p.m. EDT

DES MOINES, Iowa — If you've heard Hillary Clinton on the stump for Democrats this year, you've heard her praise incumbents locked in titanic $100-million Senate battles. But you may have also heard her single out Staci Appel, who is running for Congress here and may be a rare bright spot for Democrats on what is shaping up to be a bleak Election Night Tuesday.

Appel is running for Congress in an open seat from this true tossup district that includes Des Moines and the Southwest quadrant of the state. And she's got a fan in Hillary Clinton, who has praised Appel in speeches from San Francisco to New York City.

"I was in Iowa with a candidate for Congress Staci Appel. She is a great mom who worked her way up from minimum wage to management, and with enough support, she could be the first women ever elected from Iowa to Congress," Clinton said at a gathering of Democratic women in Washington in September.

Appel, a former state senator who was a county chair for Clinton's presidential campaign in 2008, is happy to hear it. "Well, I'm a fan of hers!" she said in an interview during a campaign stop at a coffee shop here.

The state has a history of rejecting women at the polls – as Clinton, who came in an embarrassing third place here, knows – but it might elect two or more Tuesday night, including Appel and Republican Senate candidate Joni Ernst.

While other Democrats have struggled here, Appel is feeling good heading into election night, with a strong financial lead, a narrow edge in polls, and a chance to break Iowa's glass ceiling that Democrats say is firing up voters. "The excitement to elect the first woman to Congress is really huge," she told msnbc.

Appel is counting on that excitement to help her do better than other Democrats on the ticket. "We've outperformed Bruce Braley," she said. "I think it's because I haven't served in Washington, D.C. I've served here in Iowa and I have a record of getting things done."

Also confident is Ernst, whom Gov. Terry Brandstad introduced on Monday at event in Newton as "the first woman senator from Iowa, the first woman combat veteran in the United States Senate."

In a memo, her campaign touted an internal poll that they say shows 8% of voters in the district plan to vote for Ernst and Appel. "We believe it is important to share with you that we have been running ahead of the Braley in the 3rd district since we began polling in July," campaign manager Ben Miller wrote.

In the entire county, her campaign is one of only a small handful of congressional races where Democrat have a good opportunity to pick up a seat, and where the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is still spending outside money to back a candidate in an open seat.

Republican opponent David Young, a former chief of staff to Sen. Chuck Grassley, came in fifth place in a Republican primary, but won during a party convention. A magician who has raised eyebrows with campaign ads featuring illusions, Young has struggled at times. He had only $30,000 on hand in his most recent campaign finance report, to Appel's nearly $250,000.

He also came under criticism from fellow Republicans recently for saying Obamacare was "here to stay." An influential conservative blogger slammed his "schizophrenic" campaign.

Still, polls show a close race that could come down to the wire.

In the state Senate, where Appel served as assistant majority leader, the mother of six worked on family-centric issues: Universal pre-school, a ban on texting while driving, equal pay for equal work, a seat belt law, and an indoor smoking ban.

The state has attracted other top-tier women candidates, like Christie Vilsack in 2012, but has yet to send a woman to Congress.

Appel took a pass on responding to Sen. Tom Harkin's controversial comments that Ernst is "very attractive."

As for Hillary Clinton, Appel wants to help her again – and this time to win the state. "She will win," Appel said.

November 3, 2014, 8:23 p.m. EST

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Hillary Rodham Clinton closed out her first political season since stepping down as secretary of state with a scene that looked very much like the beginning of the long 2016 campaign.

She shook scores of hands, posed for pictures and caught up with supporters from her failed 2008 run at a restaurant owned by a stalwart of the New Hampshire Democratic Party. The packed scene Sunday at the Puritan Backroom was among 45 midterm-related political events listed by Clinton's office this year. Four of those were in New Hampshire.

Of course, many of the New Hampshire voters she met encouraged her to run again in 2016, and Clinton looked the part of a candidate. She has said she will decide after Jan. 1 whether to mount a second run for the White House.

As one of her party's most popular figures and a proven fund-raiser, Clinton was both doing a favor for Democrats around the country this year and, perhaps, gathering supporters and building a network that she would need next year and in 2016 if she were to launch another White House bid.

The list of her appearances and other work for Democrats this year began with a D.C. fundraiser for female Democratic Senate candidates on Sept. 9 and included stops in 19 states. Including, yes, Iowa.

CNN: "Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign quietly begins to take shape"

By Brianna Keilar

November 3, 2014, 6:42 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton has spent the final moments of the midterm campaign season publicly deflecting the flurry of questions about her likely run for president.

But behind the scenes, her campaign machine is quietly whirring to life.

Clinton insiders have begun to approach Washington-based Democratic operatives who may play a role in a potential campaign and are soliciting their recommendations on other possible staffers, according to Democrats familiar with the conversations.

A number Clinton associates are compiling staffing lists, according to multiple Democratic sources. Michael Whouley and Minyon Moore of the Democratic communications and consulting firm Dewey Square Group are one conduit to Clinton's inner circle and among the primary compilers of the campaign universe that will surround Clinton, should she run.

The firm is led by veteran players in Clinton world. Whouley was an adviser to Vice President Al Gore and a Clinton campaign aide while Moore is a longtime Clinton confidante.

Ginny Terzano, head of communications for Dewey Square, said the characterization is "incorrect."

"DSG officials have no role" in a potential Clinton campaign, she said.

Operatives at the firm are reviewing possible Clinton staffers "under the guise of spitballing ideas," as one Democratic source put it.

With a trio of pro-Hillary superPACs -- Ready for Hillary, Priorities USA Action and Correct the Record -- months into shoring up support, a Clinton campaign is already well underway outside of her inner circle.

"The reality is that if you have a message and you're larger than life, the organization can come together pretty quickly," said Tom McMahon, who served as deputy campaign director for Howard Dean's 2004 campaign. "It can be a turnkey operation."

As the Clinton campaign apparatus is constructed, those close to her are trying to shroud it from view, wary of the glaring political spotlight that amplifies every move the former secretary of state makes.

"There are no formal talks, no one is being offered jobs," one source told CNN, dismissing the signs of campaign life as "a lot of jockeying" from Democrats who want to work on a Clinton campaign.

In September, Clinton and her inner circle were dismayed by a leak to Politico that revealed the presence of John Podesta -- former Chief of Staff to President Bill Clinton, current top aide to President Barack Obama and the person favored to serve as chairman of a Hillary Clinton campaign -- at meetings with pro-Clinton super PACs this summer.

Huma Abedin, one of Clinton's closest aides, has told multiple Democrats to rein in chatter about 2016, saying Clinton wants to keep attention on the midterm elections and minimize attention on a presidential run, according to a Democratic source who spoke to Abedin.

Clinton and the small team she employs are trying to keep her out of the tarnishing political spotlight until she is ready to make a run official, something Clinton will likely do by the end of winter, though she would like to put it off as late as possible.

"If there's not a competitive primary, the general election starts as soon as she declares," said Katie Packer Gage, former deputy campaign manager for Mitt Romney's 2012 presidential run, who says the challenge of a Clinton campaign will be more of what her current team is already struggling with -- "how do they keep her fresh for the American people?"

Recent campaigns for viable Democratic or Republican presidential candidates were well into the preliminary phase of staffing up at this point in time, with top aides already getting in line ahead of an official announcement.

In 2012, Matt Rhoades, at the time the executive director of Mitt Romney's Political Action Committee and later Romney's campaign manager, was already in early discussions with all of those who would become senior staff.

Well before the 2006 midterms, then-Sen. Barack Obama had conducted preliminary discussions with and identified a number of top aides. His campaign effectively went into high gear after the elections, though he launched his exploratory committee in January 2007 and declared his candidacy in February.

But some political operatives warn not to read too much into the beginning phase of a Clinton campaign currently underway.

"Of course the preliminary conversations should be going on," said Steve Elmendorf, Deputy Campaign Manager for John Kerry's 2004 campaign. "But there are a lot of people who have had those conversations - who thought about running for office, made plans to run for office, and didn't."

Among those believed to be part of a potential Clinton campaign, Guy Cecil, the current executive director of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, appears to be one of Clinton's most likely choices for campaign manager, according to interviews with more than two dozen Democrats.

"Even if Democrats don't hang onto the Senate, people respect the job that he's done," said one.

Cecil's role is expected to fall under the oversight of Podesta, seen as a calming force who could squash much of the internal drama that plagued Clinton's 2008 campaign. Podesta is expected to stay at the White House through the State of the Union, according to two sources familiar with his current plans, despite his initial commitment of one year service when Obama named him to his post in the West Wing last December.

By last Spring, Robby Mook, who managed the campaign that propelled Clinton fundraising guru, Terry McAuliffe, into the Virginia governor's mansion, has "been on ice" - as one Democrat put it - since as early as the spring, according to two Democrats familiar with the discussion. He was told not to make long term plans by those close to Clinton, the sources say, and is widely expected to play a major role in running the campaign.

Dennis Cheng, who manages fundraising for the Clinton Foundation and served as Hillary Clinton's deputy chief of protocol at the State Department, is the frontrunner for finance director, according to multiple Democrats. Huma Abedin, as well as longtime Clinton aide Philippe Reines and Nick Merrill, Clinton's current spokesperson, are expected to serve in influential roles in and around the campaign.

Politico: "A midterm referendum on Barack Obama"

By Edward-Isaac Dove

November 4, 2014, 5:05 a.m. EST

President Barack Obama's policies aren't actually on the ballot, and neither is he. But 2014 has been all about him.

The midterm map put Democratic candidates on defense — there are indeed red states and blue states, and they vote Republican in the red states, especially with an anti-incumbency mood in the air.

But the predominant theme has been opposition to Obama himself. Unstoppable in his 2008 and 2012 campaigns, he is now likely headed for another midterm rebuff from a churning country with buyer's remorse.

That the only Obama campaign stop on Monday was the first lady's rally in Baltimore for Anthony Brown's gubernatorial bid says everything about the president's standing at the end of the midterms. (That the governor's race narrowed in Maryland says a lot about how the campaigns closed for Democrats, too.)

The president was the theme that ran through all the races. Obamacare, ISIL, Ebola, the economy — for Republicans, these all were different ways of talking about how terrible the president is, not making the country or the world work for Americans. And that talk only hardened in the final days of this year's races.

Rep. Bill Cassidy, a Republican hoping to knock out Sen. Mary Landrieu, said plainly to reporters Saturday in New Orleans what the GOP's been thinking all across the country.

"The issues are on our side. Every week the president does something to help us. Folks here are wondering why in the heck she would support the fellow when he's against what they see as the right thing to do," Cassidy said. "So, it works for us."

Democrats, meanwhile, spent months figuring out new ways to distance themselves from the president and say they disagreed with his positions.

Obama himself has missed the adoring crowds, replaced by an endless parade of fundraisers where he has gone through the motions of a speech about hope over cynicism that even he didn't seem to believe anymore. In contrast, at his Saturday night rally in Detroit for gubernatorial candidate Mark Schauer and Gary Peters — the only Senate candidate who wanted him — he was sharp and funny and energetically ripped into the Republicans, feeding off the energy of 6,000 people actually ecstatic to see him.

There, Obama put himself at the center of the conversation again, as he hasn't since the early October speech in which he insisted his policies were on the ballot, making Democrats everywhere bang their collective head against the wall.

"Gary needs your vote, and Mark needs your vote," Obama said. "I need your vote."

But there aren't many crowds like that left. Most Democratic campaigns didn't want Obama anywhere near them, and with his negative numbers continuing to rise through the fall, several of those that had expressed interest rescinded their requests.

That only added to Republican glee.

"Everybody wants Mitt Romney or Jeb Bush, but nobody wants Obama, so he's hiding in the White House somewhere," said Bob Dole, as he campaigned for Sen. Pat Roberts over the weekend at the American Legion in Overland Park, Kansas.

But Monday, White House press secretary Josh Earnest pushed back on the idea that the midterms were a referendum on Obama. Earnest chalked up the negative feelings to voters holding Obama accountable for Washington dysfunction rather than disapproving of his policies.

"The vast majority of voters are not making their decision in this election based on their appraisal of the president," Earnest said.

The map shaped the macro-dynamics: Montana, Arkansas and Louisiana were slipping away from Democrats, while Republicans fizzled in Minnesota, Oregon and Michigan. West Virginia's GOP turn was what kept Shelley Moore Capito gliding to a Senate seat. Pennsylvania gubernatorial hopeful Tom Wolf didn't break away in polls because of his dynamism on the stump.

But in a year when so many Senate and governor's races stayed within 3 points even in the final hours, Obama was a constant. In purple states like Colorado, New Hampshire and Iowa, he was a clear drag.

Joni Ernst, the Republican nominee who headed into the final days appearing to have an edge over Rep. Bruce Braley, told POLITICO on Saturday that the president is the reason she believes she's headed to a win in the state where Obama's march to the White House began.

"Iowans are rejecting President Obama and his policies, which Congressman Braley has supported over the past six years of his time in Congress," Ernst said while standing at a train depot in Osceola. "We are seeing that Iowans want a different direction, and they are choosing to go with me."

North Carolina GOP Senate nominee Thom Tillis used the specter of Obama's last two years in office to propel his cause. "Can you imagine if we don't get a Senate majority what this president will do in the remaining two years of his term?" he asked 300 supporters in a high school cafeteria in Catawba, North Carolina.

Speaking a day earlier at a rally for Sen. Kay Hagan in Raleigh, Bill Clinton said Tillis' strategy was clear.

"He's trying take to her off the ballot and put the president on it," Clinton said. "Isn't that what's going on? He knows the president's having a hard time."

Even with Obama's job approval ticking slightly up in recent weeks, according to Wall Street Journal/NBC News polling released Sunday, the overall number of people who say they want "a great deal of change" is higher than in 2010 — 87 percent of Republicans and 47 percent of Democrats.

Lynne Smith, a Democrat who'd already voted by the time she showed up for a Davenport rally that Vice President Joe Biden led for Braley last week, said she thought Obama had made the right decision to stay away from the Senate race.

"I'm sure he would be highly criticized if he would come to campaign. The Republicans will pull anything to put him down," Smith said.

Some Democrats tried to push back.

"If they don't like Obama, that's fine," said former Sen. John Breaux during an interview at a pro-Landrieu rally in Lafayette, Louisiana, on Friday. "But he's not on the ballot in Louisiana."

But at a rally Saturday, New Orleans Mayor Mitch Landrieu, the senator's brother, acknowledged that is indeed where Republican feelings are in one of the races that could end up deciding control of the Senate.

"Bill Cassidy has told everybody who he hates and this is really clear," he said. "If you want to elect somebody who will spend every day hating every breath that Obama makes and tearing down everything that Congress tries to do, you know who to vote for."

Mediaite: "Beck: GOP Taking Control Could End Up Helping Hillary"

By Josh Feldman

November 3, 2014, 3:59 p.m. EDT

Glenn Beck isn't too eager about Republicans potentially taking control of the Senate, and argued today that the GOP in charge could actually be exactly what Hillary Clinton and President Obama are hoping for. Beck warned that a GOP victory "isn't necessarily a good thing" for the country.

Obama will be happy, Beck argued, because after the midterms, Obama will have nothing left to lose, and with no more elections in his future, he's gonna go all-out in pushing his agenda. And Beck predicted the ensuing fight will be "the end of the republic as we know it."

He cited the immigration debate in particular and said the fight between the president and Congress will help out a presidential contender:

"Who will be there to say, 'Look, the GOP is crazy, they're full of haters, they're full of racists... there's a place in between here and we need to start talking about common sense?' May I introduce you to the next President of the United States, Hillary Rodham Clinton."

We support crafting a statement. Key is to stay at high level reaffirming her support for protecting workers' right to organize and perhaps stating hope Court will do the same (think she expressed hope SCOTUS would rule in favor of marriage equality while the case was still pending). But we don't want it to look like she's getting ahead of them (e.g., predicting a bad outcome) since they've just taken the case and we don't know the result.

PUBLIC SERVICE WORKERS ON SUPREME COURT GRANT
OF CERT IN *FRIEDRICHS V. CTA

Lawsuit Seeks to Curtail Freedom of Firefighters, Teachers, Nurses, First-Responders to Stick Together and Advocate for Better Public Services, Better Communities

Jeopardizes American Promise that Hard Work Leads Families to a Decent Life

WASHINGTON—NEA President Lily Eskelsen García, AFT President Randi Weingarten, CTA President Eric C. Heins, AFSCME President Lee Saunders, and SEIU President Mary Kay Henry issued the following joint statement today in response to U.S. Supreme Court granting cert to Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association:

“We are disappointed that at a time when big corporations and the wealthy few are rewriting the rules in their favor, knocking American families and our entire economy off-balance, the Supreme Court has chosen to take a case that threatens the fundamental promise of America—that if you work hard and play by the rules you should be able to provide for your family and live a decent life.

“The Supreme Court is revisiting decisions that have made it possible for people to stick together for a voice at work and in their communities—decisions that have stood for more than 35 years—and that have allowed people to work together for better public services and vibrant communities.

“When people come together in a union, they can help make sure that our communities have jobs that support our families. It means teachers can stand up for their students. First responders can push for critical equipment to protect us. And social workers can advocate effectively for children’s safety.

“America can’t build a strong future if people can’t come together to improve their work and their families’ futures. Moms and dads across the country have been standing up in the thousands to call for higher wages and unions. We hope the Supreme Court heeds their voices.”

And public servants are speaking out, too, about how Friedrichs v. CTA would undermine their ability to provide vital services the public depends on. In their own words:

“As a school campus monitor, my job is to be on the front lines to make sure our students are safe. Both parents and students count on me—it’s a responsibility that I take very seriously. It’s important for me to have the right to voice concerns over anything that might impede the safety of my students, and jeopardizing my ability to speak up for them is a risk for everyone.”

—Carol Peek, a school campus security guard from Ventura, Calif.

“I love my students, and I want them to have everything they need to get a high-quality public education. When educators come together, we can speak with the district about class size, about adequate staffing, about the need for counselors, nurses, media specialists and librarians in schools. And we can advocate for better practices that serve our kids. With that collective voice, we can have conversations with the district that we probably wouldn’t be able to have otherwise—and do it while engaging our communities, our parents and our students.”

—Kimberly Colbert, a classroom teacher from St. Paul, Minn.

“As a mental health worker, my colleagues and I see clients who are getting younger and more physical. Every day we do our best work to serve them and keep them safe, but the risk of injury and attack is a sad, scary reality of the job. But if my coworkers and I come together and have a collective voice on the job, we can advocate for better patient care, better training and equipment, and safe staffing levels. This is about all of us. We all deserve safety and dignity on the job, because we work incredibly hard every day and it’s certainly not glamorous.”

—Kelly Druskis-Abreu, a mental health worker from Worcester, Mass.

“Our number one job is to protect at-risk children. Working together, front-line social workers and investigators have raised standards and improved policies that keep kids safe from abuse and neglect. I can't understand why the Supreme Court would consider a case that could make it harder for us to advocate for the children and families we serve—this work is just too important.”

—Ethel Everett, a child protection worker from Springfield, Mass.

1. I wouldn't use the term black people. Just say African Americans throughout.
2. I'm not following this sentence: "Some of the most poignant inequities happen in private – like when African American parents have “the talk” with their sons and daughters." I get what we're trying to get at but it sounds like the conversation itself is the inequity, which seems weird to me. Maybe more of "because of these inequities, parents have to...." etc. Know what I mean? I would also put this sentence after the asthma sentence and right before the 'unavoidable conclusion.' Powerful there.
3. Did we remove the word "systemic" or "structural"? I thought we would keep it if we say inequities following it?

4. Are we good saying Michael Brown's name? I'm good but know there were issues before in prior speeches
5. Sam Dubose didn't die this week, the officer was just charged. It was on July 19th. I would say "most recently"
6. The black lives matter piece is perfect
7. I don't think the "lifetime of opportunity" works in the context we're trying to use it in. You can be African American and had a lifetime of opportunity, and still go to jail or die because you're black. I agree we shouldn't use white privilege but not sure this works either. Trying to think of suggestions right now

There is a Mother Jones article on his One Florida plan and how after he signed an executive order ending affirmative action at colleges there has been a significant decline in % of African Americans attending state schools in Florida. That is probably worth digging out and using if Tony can find it. Seems like that's the most direct way to point out bullshit in right to rise. A little more direct than Medicare although I would keep that in.

I'm glad that so many presidential candidates are here today. It's a signal that the work you've been doing for decades is getting the political attention it deserves. But the real test of a candidate's commitment is not whether we come to speak at your national conference, as important as that is. It's whether we're still around after the cameras are gone and the votes are counted. It's whether our positions live up to our rhetoric.

And too often we see a mismatch between what some candidates say in venues like this, and what they plan to actually do if they're elected.

I don't think you can credibly say that everyone has a "right to rise" – and then say you're for phasing out Medicare, or for repealing Obamacare.

People can't rise if they can't afford health care. They can't rise if the minimum wage is too low to live on.

And you can't seriously talk about the right to rise... and support laws that deny the right to vote.

What people say matters – but what they do matters more. And Americans deserve leaders who'll face inequity head on, in all its complexity – who won't just concede that there are barriers holding people back, but who'll do what it takes to tear those barriers down, once and for all.

Subject: Script review meeting in DC, January 24

Hi all, we need to schedule a two-hour in-person meeting next Thursday January 24th in the afternoon to review and discuss scripts we'll be getting back from media firms. This is in addition to our Monday, 11:00 AM call and anything else we schedule on an ad hoc basis.

Right now I think we're likely to hear back from: Murphy-Putnam, Squier-Knapp-Dunn, Mark Armour, Deno Seder, Zimmerman/Markman, First Tuesday, Matt Macwilliams and Will Robinson.

I'm still trying to close the loop with some other folks including Group SJR, Devito/Verdi (I had a good convo with Ellis Verdi), McMahon Squier Lapp and Associates, Dixon/Davis and GMMB. Susan, Paul and I came up with a compensation proposal for this first phase and none of the firms have balked at it yet.

I'm asking Ryan to work with folks to nail down a two-hour period to focus on this in-person.

The firms were all wowed at the depth of our research, tracking and polling to date. They were really impressed by our focus and strategy--a hat tip to Tara, the HT researchers and the GQRR team.

thanks,

-Tom

Subject: Re: Decision Memo on G20 Meeting Attendance

I totally agree with the conclusion, but if Treasury's actions last week to box in the transition on participating in the tarp are any guide, I think the probability may be fairly high that our heading off would be leaked (the point Jim raised). So, we would need an answer ready for immediate use if that happens. Also, I think even if this works, OB and his team will be continuously besieged by both press and other governments for reactions to whatever occurs. For example, one finance minister who is unsympathetic to the European proposals being floated wants to help OB by opposing them. What will you say to him - a no comment may not seem like a good idea, and anything else may leak. In any case, two and a half months of no comment while proposals are being debated around the world may not be desirable and, if it is desirable, may be hard to execute effectively, especially if crisis is raging. So, I think this conclusion is right, but that this just begins the process of figuring out how to handle the summit and related matters. Also, this is part of the larger question of how to manage the many economic transition issues without taking ownership on the one hand or seeming political in a time of crisis on the other hand (and, moreover, possibly seeking to have influence when deemed desirable, since OB will have to live with some of these decisions that could be consequential)

Subject: Decision Memo on G20 Meeting Attendance

Attached is the draft of a memo to BO seeking a decision on his possible attendance at the G20 meeting on Nov. 15 (assuming that an invitation from Pres Bush would be forthcoming to the President-elect). As you will see, the option of trying to head off an invitation is developed at greatest length. That mostly reflects the relatively straightforward nature of the other three options, although also a bit the fact that some have already expressed a preference for this option.

Please let me know as soon as possible if you have comments on the body of the memo and/or a choice among the options. Based on various conversations to date, the memo states that none of us on the economic side favors the option of accepting an invitation.

Susan and Jim -- note the line on p. 2 (right before the options section) to the effect that our foreign policy advisors concur that he should not attend the G20 meeting. I'm presuming that's true, but want to draw your particular attention to it.

I'd hold on the Romney spots, except the ones piggybacking on McCain. Certainly wouldn't spend 75k at this point to do the factory spot. I think McShame is a mistake--right up there with General Betray us.

I'm thinking for the expensive Romney and McCain spots we wait until after Florida tonight to pull the trigger. So, we focus on getting today's scripts in good shape.

I'm trying to get more McCain and Romney "economy" scripts. Might not be doable for next week.

January 10, 2013

Dear Senator Rockefeller, you have been our champion! We get renewed hope from your letters to CMS about Dual Eligibles and your vigilance regarding our safety. Hearing you in the Senate Finance Committee hearing on the Internet about the Duals Demonstration Pilots gave us hope that governments will not be able to use it to cut the budgets and endanger us instead of coordinating our care. We are not in any way sure and have great reason to be concerned that managed care demonstration pilots will not be safe or effective in coordinating our care or containing costs, (see articles listed below.) We would not be opposed to pilots, to be proved that we are wrong. But as you yourself stated, using 70% and 80% of the state as a pilot project does less to test out the efficacy of a plan and instead seems more like fundamentally changing the entire mode of service delivery in the states.

We are members of the In Home Supportive Services IHSS Consumers Union, a grassroots organization of Seniors and People with Disabilities, and CDR Californians for Disability Rights trying to keep our safety and civil rights under transitions to managed care. What may have started out to be a laudable project to coordinate the care of people who are eligible for both Medi-Cal and Medicare is being abused by the California Department of Health Care Services to cut the budget and is endangering very fragile people with complex conditions in the process of transitioning all people on Medi-Cal into managed care. We want to share the links pasted below to these news stories regarding the lawsuit protecting us in California, to inform you as you continue to be our champion! We are also attaching a List of Recommended Consumer Potections under Managed Care.

Lawsuit Challenges Mandated Transfer to Medi-Cal Managed Care for Seniors and Persons With Disabilities Who Suffer From Complex Medical Conditions

On December 21st, LAFLA, the Western Center on Law & Poverty and National Health Law Program filed a lawsuit against the California Department of Health Care Services (DHCS) and its director, Toby Douglas, on behalf of Della Saavedra, Juan Cameros, Anita Valadez, Raquel Alvarez and Azatui Charkhchyan (Petitioners), who were harmed by the state's failure to protect their right to continue their care with doctors and specialists they had been seeing before being forced to join a health plan against their will. Until recently, these Medi-Cal beneficiaries were able to obtain necessary specialty care in an ongoing and coordinated manner from physicians who treated them on a fee-for-service basis.

At stake in this lawsuit is the health and safety of Petitioners and thousands of other low-income California Seniors and Persons with Disabilities, who suffer from complex, often life-threatening, medical conditions, who are eligible and should be exempted from involuntary enrollment in Medi-Cal managed care plans so their critical care is not abruptly disrupted," states Elena Ackel, senior attorney, Legal Aid Foundation of Los Angeles.

Beginning in June 2011, more than 240,000 seniors and persons with disabilities in Los Angeles and 15 other California counties received notices that they would be transferred to a Medi-Cal Managed Care Plan. These beneficiaries receive Medi-Cal but not Medicare. Approximately 27,000 of these disabled beneficiaries filed exemption requests indicating they had complex medical conditions which allowed them to remain in fee-for-service Medi-Cal.

Under state law and regulations, Medi-Cal beneficiaries are entitled to remain with their fee-for-service providers if they are currently receiving treatment for a number of specifically enumerated complex medical conditions or qualify under a catch-all category. For example, there is a specific exemption for cancer patients if they are undergoing a course of treatment or if they have been approved for a course of treatment. Petitioner Della Saavedra requires treatment for her Multiple Myeloma (a type of cancer), hypertension and diabetes and thus was entitled to be exempt from managed care. Nevertheless her claim for exemption was denied because the state was applying a secret and more stringent standard than allowed by law when reviewing exemption requests. Further, the beneficiary and his or her doctor had no notice of these unwritten standards that were being applied in reviewing of exemption claims.

As a consequence, many of the beneficiaries who meet the exemption standards have been wrongfully transferred to managed care and cannot get the specialty care and medications that they need.

Robert Newman, Senior Counsel at the Western Center on Law and Poverty, asserts, "The Department of Health Care Services treats many of these frail, elderly and disabled individuals with complicated medical conditions as though they have run-of-the-mill problems. A person who is receiving treatment for cancer or kidney failure cannot suddenly be cut off from their regular treating physicians and told to find new doctors to treat them."

This lawsuit seeks an order from the court prohibiting DHCS from continuing their unlawful practices, and allowing Petitioners and others like them who have been wrongfully denied an exemption to resume getting critical health care with their previous fee-for-service Medi-Cal providers until those doctors indicate it is safe for them to be transferred to a managed care plan.

Hillary Clinton's Plan to End Corporate Inversions and Invest in America

Hillary Clinton believes that getting incomes rising by creating good-paying jobs is the defining economic challenge of our time. Today, as part of her plan to create jobs and kick-start wage growth, Clinton is releasing a proposal to stop so-called "inversions" where companies leave the United States on paper to lower their taxes. She will use the proceeds of this plan to encourage and reward investment in good-paying jobs here in the United States.

Hillary believes that we need a broader conversation on reforming our business tax code, but we simply cannot wait to prevent inversions and related transactions that threaten to further erode our tax base as Republicans in Congress use gridlock to allow them to continue.

Congress should act immediately to prevent corporations from engaging in inversions, where businesses move their corporate residence abroad on paper in order to escape paying their fair share of taxes. Without immediate action, inversions and transactions like the recently announced Pfizer-Allergan deal – in which Pfizer is merging with Allergan, giving up its identity as a U.S. company, and becoming "Irish" for the purpose of lowering its tax bill – will continue to erode the U.S. tax base. These corporations benefit from access to the most talented workforce in the world, billions of dollars in public investment in basic research, and the robust American legal system, yet trade in their U.S. identity to avoid paying their fair share. Inversions and transactions like Pfizer's could be stopped if the Republicans were not standing in the way of legislation to prevent them. It is time for Republicans in Congress to stop thwarting action, and stop using tax games as a method of tilting the tax code even further toward the largest multinational corporations.

Throughout this campaign, Hillary has said that our economy works best when businesses invest in America for the long term. She firmly believes businesses want a playing field that's both fairer and more competitive, in which the biggest multinational corporations no longer get special advantages over smaller, domestic businesses. Ending inversions is a first step – a step that cannot wait. Hillary believes that we need to reform and simplify our business tax code to encourage and reward investments in growth, innovation, and jobs here in the United States, and she will be laying out further ways to do that in the months ahead.

Hillary Clinton has a plan to:

1) Restrict "inversions" and related transactions that let companies forego their U.S. identity to lower their taxes, through both Congressional and regulatory action. Clinton's plan will call on Congress to prevent "inversions" and end transactions like the Pfizer-Allergan deal. This includes imposing a commonsense 50% threshold for foreign company shareholder ownership after a merger before an American company can give up its U.S. identity, and an "exit tax" to ensure multinational companies that change their identity pay a fair share of the U.S. taxes they owe on earnings stashed overseas. If Congress has not acted to address inversions and related loopholes, Hillary is also calling for Treasury to use its full legal authority to prevent inversions and restrict the tax loopholes they allow, including cracking down on "earnings stripping," one of the key benefits of inversions.

2) Use the proceeds to invest in long-term growth and jobs in the United States. Clinton's plan will use the revenue from closing loopholes to help drive growth and job creation here in America. That means strengthening research and development; rewarding companies that bring good jobs to the United States; and expanding support for advanced manufacturing, small businesses, and startups. And while preventing inversions is a first, immediate step that cannot wait, Clinton believes in the need for broader changes in the business tax code and will discuss her approach over the course of the campaign.

PREVENT 'INVERSIONS' THAT ERODE THE TAX BASE AND DISADVANTAGE COMPANIES THAT PROUDLY LOCATE IN AND INVEST IN THE UNITED STATES

Inversions and related transactions let corporations avoid paying their fair share. In the past decade, nearly 50 companies have chosen to leave the United States for a foreign country on paper, saving billions of dollars in taxes through these so-called “inversions” and related transactions. For example, Pfizer’s recently announced expatriation could help it permanently avoid paying its fair share of taxes on as much as \$70-\$150 billion in foreign profits stashed offshore and even more easily shift profits made here to low-tax countries overseas. Inversions and related loopholes distort our tax code, erode the tax base, and undermine fair competition between multinationals and domestic companies:

- Inversions let corporations take advantage of loopholes to permanently avoid paying their fair share and erode the tax base – even as inverted companies benefit from the U.S. economy: Companies that invert move abroad on paper, but keep their headquarters and operations in the U.S. They still benefit from America’s talented workforce and legal system – as well as public investment in infrastructure and research. However, inversions erode the U.S. tax base by tens of billions of dollars. For example, inverted companies can take advantage of additional loopholes, like “earnings stripping,” to further shift income abroad and avoid U.S. taxes. And such loopholes can, in some cases, allow inverted companies to more easily access foreign earnings without paying their fair share of taxes. Domestic competitors are thereby disadvantaged, and all of us have to make up the shortfall in revenues.
- Domestic U.S. businesses are put at a competitive disadvantage by inversions: Unlike large multinational companies, small businesses and domestic companies located entirely in the United States cannot take advantage of international tax loopholes to lower the tax rates that they pay. As a result, inversions put smaller American businesses at a disadvantage.
- Inverting companies often already face low effective tax rates: Even though the U.S. has a 35% top statutory rate, loopholes and distortions mean that some of the largest U.S. multinationals that are pursuing inversions already often face low effective tax rates. That is true of Pfizer: Reuters reported that it pays a lower share of its profits in overall income taxes than other competing pharmaceutical companies, and the Wall Street Journal highlighted its low tax rate using reporting practices for other companies. One study found that effective tax rates for the largest U.S. multinationals were lower than effective tax rates for the largest E.U. multinationals in eight of the ten years from 2001-2010.

Clinton will prevent inversions and related transactions driven by tax planning to lower corporate tax bills. Mergers should be carried out for business reasons, not to take advantage of tax loopholes and avoid paying a company’s fair share of taxes. We need to act now to prevent the continued erosion of the tax base, or it will be further and further reduced by the time we reach a solution on broader reform. Clinton’s plan is designed to prevent transactions motivated by tax planning that allow American businesses to avoid paying their fair share. Clinton’s plan would bar abusive inversions by raising the threshold for the size of a foreign merger partner to at least 50% of the combined company. This commonsense approach would mean that an American company could no longer give up its U.S. identity by finding a smaller merger partner overseas. This would be an important step forward, but alone is not sufficient.

In the absence of additional measures, corporations could still game the 50% threshold or barely meet it, and the tax system would continue to favor corporations that move their residence abroad through foreign takeovers. In a comprehensive approach to ending inversions and related transactions, Clinton’s plan also includes two measures – an “exit tax” on unrepatriated profits and ending “earnings stripping” – that would reduce some of the significant tax advantages of expatriating. And, if Congress has not acted, she would ask her Treasury Department to pursue any other measures to prevent or restrict inversions and related tax planning within its legal authority. In combination, these measures would help ensure that, when a U.S. corporation merges with a foreign corporation and moves its residence, the transaction is being done for good business reasons and not to game the tax system:

- Entirely block inversions that are likely to be the most abusive through a 50% merger threshold: Today, a company can give up its U.S. identity to avoid taxes through a merger with a smaller foreign company where only a small stake of ownership – one-fifth of the combined company – goes to the foreign company’s shareholders. This is indefensible. Clinton’s plan would require that no U.S. company could pretend to be a foreign company to avoid paying U.S. taxes unless its merger partner is the same size or larger. And she would call for Congress to make this restriction retroactive to May 2014, following proposals introduced by Democrats in Congress and President Obama’s Treasury Department. In the past, Republican and Democratic presidents have signed or proposed retroactive legislation applying to inversions and other loopholes.

- Ensure that companies leaving the U.S. pay an “exit tax” on what they owe on their overseas earnings: In addition to barring inversions between a U.S. company and a smaller foreign company, Clinton would call on Congress to impose an “exit tax” on the untaxed overseas earnings of multinational companies that leave the U.S. to avoid the taxes they owe on these earnings . Under the current system, U.S. companies can defer taxes on their overseas earnings until they bring the money back to the U.S. As a result, U.S. corporations hold trillions of dollars overseas, deferring the U.S. taxes that they owe. Companies that shift their residence abroad often have an advantage in using tax planning to access earnings stashed overseas without paying the taxes that are supposed to be paid when foreign earnings are accessed. Clinton believes that if a company does give up its U.S. identity, it should pay taxes on the unrepatriated profits that it made as a U.S. company, benefiting from U.S. infrastructure, our investments in human capital, and the efforts that the government makes on behalf of U.S. corporations – from basic research to enforcing trade treaties. When an American citizen renounces their citizenship, there are rules intended to make sure they pay the taxes that they owe. The same should be true for corporations’ unrepatriated offshore earnings.
- Limit the ability of multinationals to engage in “earnings stripping:” Multinational corporations use a practice called “earnings stripping” to shift profits from the United States to countries with lower tax rates, and to maximize high deductions in the United States. This loophole reduces the taxes they pay in the U.S. – putting them at an advantage over domestic and smaller competitors, and leaving others to pick up the burden. Earnings stripping is much easier for a foreign-based multinational to do. For instance, a foreign-based multinational can load up a U.S. subsidiary with debt through loans from one part of the company to another and claim a large deduction for the interest here in the United States – all while sending the interest income abroad to a country with low tax rates. This is one of the main benefits of inversions and related transactions, and potentially a benefit of the Pfizer-Allergan deal – making it easier to strip profits out of the United States. Ending the practice of earnings stripping would close a loophole that costs taxpayers as much as \$60 billion over 10 years .
- If Congress does not act, ask the Treasury Department to use its full legal authority to crack down on inversions and related transactions, including by restricting earnings stripping. For more than a year, Clinton, President Obama , and Democrats have called on Congress to take action. It would be far better if Congress were to act itself. However, if Congress does not do so, Clinton would ask her Treasury Department to use its full legal authority to restrict earnings stripping . She would also ask her Treasury Department to pursue any other measures within its legal authority to end related tax planning, such as further cracking down on ways that corporations, after leaving the United States, game the system to gain access to their unrepatriated earnings without paying a fair share of the taxes they owe.
- Republicans are standing in the way of action. For more than a year, with the most recent rise of inversions, President Obama and Democrats in Congress have put forward multiple proposals to address inversions. Republicans in Congress, and most of the Republican candidates, have blocked these efforts or done nothing to support immediately preventing inversions. Republicans in Congress and on the campaign trail have instead pushed for deficit increasing tax cuts tilted toward the wealthiest and argued that companies have a legal obligation to their shareholders to minimize their tax burden – without making any effort to change the laws that lead to these loopholes in the first place.

USE THE PROCEEDS FROM PREVENTING INVERSIONS AND CLOSING LOOPHOLES TO INVEST HERE, IN THE U.S.

Acting to prevent inversions and related loopholes would raise at least \$80 billion over the next decade . Clinton’s plan will use the proceeds from closing these loopholes to provide tax relief for bringing jobs back to America and supporting research, manufacturing, and small businesses. Clinton also believes that preventing inversions is only a first, immediate step that we need to protect the tax base, and will have more to say on her vision for business tax reform.

- Reward research, innovation, and locating the good jobs of the future here in the U.S.: Clinton believes that America must compete to be the world leader in research and innovation, and the high-skilled, high-paying jobs of the future. Her plan will use the tax code to reward innovation and research at companies large and small, established and new. Over the coming weeks and months, Clinton will lay out her vision for public investment in basic R&D, and driving research in the private sector. America’s future depends on leading the world in innovation, and we need rising productivity to drive higher wages for workers over the long-run.
- Offer incentives to create good-paying jobs and revitalize communities here in the U.S.: Clinton will offer incentives to reinvest and revitalize communities here in the U.S., and create good-paying, high-skilled jobs. One example of the type of proposals Clinton would offer is a plan she released this week to offer a “Manufacturing Renaissance Tax Credit.” This proposal would make hard-hit communities facing a “downward spiral” of mass layoffs and closing plants eligible for a package of relief to encourage new capital and new investment and jobs, and refurbishing and repurposing facilities. She would make a version of this proposal available in hard-hit coal communities as well. And, she will have more to say on incentives to revitalize hard-hit communities and create good jobs.

- Reward companies that bring jobs back and invest in the U.S. – and further crack down on shifting earnings and jobs overseas. Clinton will offer new proposals to provide support for companies that move jobs and production back to the U.S. from abroad. And, she will go further than her proposals on inversions and related transactions to crack down on loopholes that let corporations shift earnings and jobs overseas.
- Close oil and gas loopholes and invest in clean energy: Already during this campaign, Clinton put forward a plan to make America a clean-energy superpower by installing half a million solar panels by the end of her first term, and by generating enough renewable energy to power every home in America within ten years. And her plan would be paid for by closing tax loopholes for oil and gas companies.
- Simplify taxes for millions of small businesses – and allow small businesses to write off investments: Today, the smallest firms spend 20 times as much in money and hours filling out their taxes compared to their larger competitors. Over the coming weeks and months, Clinton will offer new plans to simplify tax filing for millions of small businesses and allow small businesses to immediately deduct expenses, letting them expand their investments, hiring, and growth.

FT: Hillary Clinton plans ‘exit tax’ to tackle inversions

Barney Jopson in Washington

Hillary Clinton is proposing to deter tax-cutting deals such as Pfizer’s planned $160bn takeover of Allergan by imposing an “exit tax” on US companies making controversial moves to shift their headquarters overseas.

The levy would apply to companies using “inversion” deals to gain low-tax access to some of the $1.1tn in cash that corporate America has parked offshore by relocating to countries with favourable rates.

Mrs Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign cited Pfizer’s move as it outlined her plan ahead of a full launch on Wednesday, creating further discomfort for the drugmaker, which has come under fire in Washington.

Pfizer’s proposed deal with Dublin-based Allergan is the biggest example of an inversion to date and has helped turn the transactions into a contentious issue in the 2016 presidential campaign.

Inversions are becoming increasingly politicised as Democrats lambast them as unpatriotic tax dodging, while Republicans say the blame lies with an uncompetitive US tax system that they say is forcing companies to flee. Mrs Clinton’s plan marks a more aggressive approach to offshore earnings than President Barack Obama’s, but it would require a change in the law and face a frosty reception from Republicans on Capitol Hill.

The Clinton camp said the proposed exit tax would capture any companies that sought to move abroad for tax reasons to ensure that they “pay their fair share”.

But such a penalty could encourage the break-up of US companies as they seek alternative ways to benefit from lower tax jurisdictions, said Rohit Kumar of PwC, a former aide to Mitch McConnell, the Republican Senate majority leader. “It would be an unintended consequence, but eminently foreseeable,” he said.

To avoid full-blown mergers that would trigger an exit tax, company assets or subsidiaries could instead escape the US tax net by being sold piece by piece to foreign entities. “They’ll have greater value in the hands of an overseas company,” Mr Kumar said.

A second part of Mrs Clinton’s plan is a call on Congress to change the law to make it harder for companies to execute inversions, her campaign said. Richard Lane, analyst at Moody’s, estimates that US companies have $1.1tn in offshore cash, with the largest balances belonging to Apple, Microsoft, Google, Cisco and Oracle — none of which has done inversions.

US businesses can invert by combining with smaller overseas companies as long as the foreign group’s shareholders end up owning at least 20 per cent of the new entity. Mrs Clinton wants to raise that minimum requirement to 50 per cent.

Mr Obama has called for Congress to act to stop inversions and ordered the Treasury department to use its limited powers to deter them, but his approach has been less aggressive than Mrs Clinton’s exit tax.

Congressional Democrats have proposed other anti-inversion measures such as barring inverters from receiving lucrative federal government contracts. Republicans argue that inversions must be tackled as part of a broad package of reforms that lowers tax rates and simplifies the system. In a budget proposal earlier this year, which was not enacted, the president called for a one-time 14 per cent tax on untaxed foreign earnings to encourage repatriation — a levy lower than the 35 per cent statutory rate.

“The Republican view is that you attract more flies with honey than vinegar. [The Clinton plan] appears to be more vinegar,” said Mr Kumar.

WSJ: Hillary Clinton Plans a Corporate ‘Exit Tax’

Proposal would be meant to deter companies from merging with smaller overseas firms

By RICHARD RUBIN And

LAURA MECKLER

Dec. 7, 2015 6:17 p.m. ET

WASHINGTON—Hillary Clinton’s plan to deter companies from leaving the U.S. will include an “exit tax,” her campaign said Monday, making it even more restrictive than President Barack Obama’s proposals.

Like Mr. Obama, Mrs. Clinton wants to prevent companies from leaving the U.S. tax system by merging with a smaller foreign firm. That rule could have discouraged Medtronic PLC from putting its tax address in Ireland and could complicate the similar transaction that Pfizer Inc. is attempting now. Both of those deals use a law that allows such inversions as long as the U.S. company’s shareholders own less than 80% of the combined business.

The Obama proposal has gone nowhere in Congress, stopped by Republicans who say it amounts to erecting walls around the U.S. tax system rather than making it more favorable. Mrs. Clinton would go further, requiring companies to pay U.S. taxes on deferred foreign earnings if they attempt to “game” her new threshold, a campaign aide said Monday.

Mrs. Clinton, the front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination, will speak about corporate taxes on Wednesday in Iowa. The aide said she would unveil “another major component” of her plan then.

The U.S. taxes companies on their world-wide earnings but allows them to claim foreign tax credits for profits earned abroad and defer U.S. taxes until they bring the money home. That system and the 35% marginal corporate tax rate encourage companies to earn money abroad in low-tax countries and leave it there. U.S. companies now have more than $2 trillion in stockpiled offshore profits that haven’t been fully taxed.

An exit tax would mirror the system the U.S. uses to tax retirement accounts of individuals who renounce their citizenship, said Steve Rosenthal, a senior fellow at the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center in Washington. “At the very least, an exit tax would throw an impediment to all the existing companies,” he said. “It’s a sensible step. Of course, it needs to be more.”

The amounts at play could be significant and could make U.S. companies much less attractive takeover targets. Amgen Inc., for example, said in a securities filing that it would owe $10.5 billion if it brought home all $29.3 billion it has outside the U.S.

Clinton’s tax would apply to some transactions structured as foreign takeovers of U.S. companies aimed at getting around the rules. When U.S. companies are bought or when they do a corporate inversion, they don’t get to bring all the offshore money back tax-free. That money is typically still subject to U.S. tax rules.

The big attraction for companies has been accumulating future profits outside the U.S. tax net.

Douglas Holtz-Eakin, a Republican economist, replied to the Clinton proposal by noting that there is already an exit tax in place. Shareholders pay taxes on gains when companies invert, and that hasn’t been effective in addressing the problem, Mr. Holtz-Eakin said. The Clinton version of the exit tax also doesn’t address what he called the fundamental problems of the U.S. corporate-tax system.

“The ratio of politics to policy in this is quite high,” he said. He added that the exit tax assumes the exits continue. “They are admitting failure up front.”

BLOOMBERG: Clinton Said to Plan New Corporate Tax Proposals, Including 'Exit Tax'

Jennifer Epstein

Updated on December 7, 2015 — 9:53 AM EST

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton on Wednesday will unveil proposals to deter U.S. companies from shifting profits overseas, including an “exit tax” to penalize companies that perform so-called tax inversions, a campaign official said.

The exit tax would apply to companies like Pfizer that move abroad for tax advantages, said the official, who didn't want to be named ahead of the official announcement. Another major part of Clinton's plan will be announced Wednesday, when Clinton is due to appear in the first-in-the-nation caucus state of Iowa, the official said.

Clinton will also restate her support for raising, to 50 percent from 20 percent, the threshold for shares a U.S. company can transfer to a foreign owner to gain tax benefits, said the official. The Obama administration also backs raising the threshold.

Clinton has said Pfizer's $160 billion deal with Allergan Plc, which will move the New York-based drugmaker's tax address to Ireland, would hurt American taxpayers. The deal is expected to be completed by the end of next year, before a new president takes office.

Lawmakers in both parties have cited the deal as the latest example of the need for corporate tax reform in order to block what are known as tax inversions. In such deals, companies typically will keep their operational headquarters in the U.S., while being able to use profits previously kept overseas out of the reach of U.S. tax authorities, and lowering their overall rate.

Congressional Democrats have unsuccessfully sought legislation to crack down on inversions since the latest wave began in 2012 by companies including Burger King Worldwide Inc., Medtronic Inc., and Mylan Inc.

Republicans have resisted, arguing that a broader revamp of the tax code should take priority, though Congress hasn't made progress. Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump, the billionaire real estate mogul, has said Pfizer's departure “is disgusting” and American politicians “should be ashamed.”

The U.S. has the highest corporate tax rate in the developed world, of 35 percent. The Associated Press reported earlier on Clinton's proposals.

Might make sense of us to brainstorm a bit in advance as well.

I just think it would be good for HRC to go into the mtg with one or two objectives. And some potential action items to get EW's help on. Has Mindy given any intel on what EW wants/needs/hopes for? Or could Mandy provide some intel? It would just be such a big deal for this meeting to go well and have EW walk out feeling positive and on board.

And then there's the press question--not sure how high the chance of a leak is, but it would be good to have a joint plan with Mindy in the event it gets out to shape coverage. Or to proactively leak if that's what EW wants. Not a bad thing to put out there that they had a constructive mtg.

This is all really helpful. On the Warren meeting: should there be a short, small call to discuss what her goals for that meeting should be--what input she wants on policy, what she should ask for, what we think Warren is going to challenge her on, etc? Seems like that could strengthen her briefing.

I am sorry I missed the meeting although I was able to get detailed downloads here in the office. A few things I was going to mention at meeting that I flag for your situational awareness. Happy to share further details:

1. A unified message: Brynne and Nick were probably too polite to raise it last week but it has been a total zoo in the office since November 4th (not that it wasn't a zoo before). Like all of you, the questions we get asked 20 times a day is a. where is she and what is she doing? and b. what are John and CDM doing?

Our answer is as honest as possible. We are giving her the time and space to think through the things she needs to think through. We acknowledge that there is policy process continuing and that is fairly well known. And if people have 2016 ideas, we are happy to have them. On John and CDM, we say you have been her closest advisors for a hundred years and that hasn't changed. Since we have never discussed this as a group or agreed on what to say, sharing with everyone.

2. Progressive friends:

- Elizabeth Warren: We confirmed this meeting last week. It is set for December 4th. We were having problems with them because this was supposed to take place in June. They do not want intermediaries discussing the relationship or the potential policy differences as they feel that is happening too much. They want to have a direct conversation about economic policy.

- Bill de Blasio: I stay in touch with him and his team a lot. He has recently asked to have increased direct access to her so he can tell his progressive partners what she thinks about issues important to them. He also thinks he can be most helpful to her if he has that kind of relationship. He wants to be seen as the loudest progressive voice for her and in order to do that he needs access. In the next 6 months, someone else will have to inherit this relationship because it will not be tenable for HRC.

3. Schedule issues 2015:

- We ended up locking in ALL her remaining paid speaking offers a few weeks ago. She reviewed them all with you at meeting so you know everything.

- Listening Tour: I know you discussed. Just a note that she only loved it in hindsight. Also flagging that we have some repair work to do in some early states like NH and Iowa based on activity of the past year.

- Morocco: No matter what happens, she will be in Morocco hosting CGI on May 5-7, 2015. Her presence was a condition for the Moroccans to proceed so there is no going back on this. Important that you know background.

4. Constituency Groups:

- Emily's List: Their 30th year gala is March 3rd, 2015. They have been lobbying for her attendance for over a year. Need to keep in mind for whatever other March activities we discuss. We have other EL issues we should discuss in next call/meeting.

- Executive Action: We have now heard from 1 friend in community saying specifically "we planning on getting more aggressive in our stance with Hillary (showing up at events and in press statements). if possible she should support executive order before the President". Need to assume starting TOMORROW, our friends will show back up at her open press events.

- LGBT and faith community: We have friends in both groups that want to start now or at least be part of steering committees on behalf of HRC and are in a holding pattern.

Random:

- We should be thoughtful about any group that wants to rent Friend of Hillary list now because there is interest. This is also probably best discussed off email.

Sorry to be so long!

Folks

HRC wants to have a meeting on Thursday at 10am in Chappaqua. It will likely last until 2pm or 3pm. If you can coordinate your schedules accordingly to be there that would be ideal.

In addition, Robby and John will do a pre-call -- likely on Monday afternoon or evening depending on what is best for folks' schedules. There also will be read-ahead materials shared on Tuesday.

Satya sent this email to Valerie Jarett:

Valerie,

I'm vacationing with my family in India, but I wanted to let you know that I've decided that Microsoft will support Sony Entertainment and enable the online distribution of the movie "The Interview". We will make the movie available beginning on Christmas Day to all of our Xbox Video users.

We are of course more than mindful of the security implications of this decision, especially at a time when we're seeing already seeing increased cyber-attack attempts on our services. But as I've thought about the issue, I've concluded that one of our core principles is at stake and we should be bold in supporting the right of American citizens to exercise their Constitutional rights. This is consistent with Microsoft's core purpose, business, and values. I've therefore directed our teams both to make the film available and I've asked a number of our employees to spend some of their holiday time getting on high alert with respect to our operational security. As I've said in an email to them, "It's time for all of us to rise to the occasion knowing that we as a company stand for core values and principles that are worth protecting."

We'll announce with Sony tomorrow the availability of "The Interview" on Xbox Video. This service has a very broad reach. It's available to over 25 million Xbox users in the United States, which is larger than any cable television network in the country. In addition, it will be available through the Xbox Video app on tens of millions of PCs, tablets, and smartphones that run Windows 8 or higher. (We'll have a final estimate of the total audience reach by tomorrow morning when the announcement is made.)

On behalf of all of our employees and customers, I want to convey our personal appreciation to the President for his leadership on this issue. He has inspired us to take action, and I know that we'll need his continued leadership and support as this issue continues to evolve.

Thank you.

Satya

The draft statement is solid but I read it last night with Cheryl's "humble leadership" tone in mind. If that's still a goal (I think it should be), I told Dan more could be done in this area. We could also do more with the moment she has...hard to talk through on a big call but if there's a few minutes maybe the three of us could talk.

John's suggestion that a Committee member use the "terrific Sec/State but she's not ready to be Google's CTO" frame also made sense to me. We didn't hash it out yesterday, but there should be a way to do this without running into the concern Mandy has ("new fangled machines"). Good to discuss also. Thanks.

"Millionaire McCain" Delivers Thank You Card to Republican Party

10/18/2016

Tallahassee, FL – One day before Sen. John McCain is scheduled to visit Florida, his doppelganger, “Millionaire McCain,” delivered a thank you card to the Republican Party of Florida in appreciation for their hard work helping him to ensure he can continue to stand up for corporate special interests. Progress Florida called upon the Senator to start standing up for Florida’s working families.

The card delivered by “Millionaire McCain” read: “Thanks again to the Republican Party of Florida for helping me hoodwink working families and keep looking out for corporate special interests.”

According to the April 16th edition of the Washington Post, “McCain offered sweeping rhetoric about the economic plight of working-class Americans...even as he spelled out a tax and spending agenda whose benefits are aimed squarely at spurring corporate growth.”

"We look forward to having both Senator Obama and Senator McCain at our annual conference to present their plans to help bridge the economic divide between communities of color and mainstream America," said Marc Morial, President and CEO of the National Urban League in a 7/23 news release.

“That’s going to be quite a challenge for Sen. McCain who is out of touch on a broad range of issues of importance to Florida’s working families,” said Progress Florida political director Damien Filer. “We’re calling on John McCain to stand up for Florida’s working families.”

Subject: Susman Godfrey's New Partner/Associate Announcement and 2012 in Review

Having trouble viewing this email? Click here

Dear Clients and Friends:

You don't hear from us often, so we thought we'd use the occasion of announcing our new partners and associates to tell you something about the year we had in 2012.

Meet Our Newest Partners and Associates

With offices in Houston, Dallas, Los Angeles, Seattle, and New York, about 100 lawyers, and lots of happy clients, we pay close attention to developing an ever-deeper bench of first-class legal talent. Although we don't have a rigid partnership track, associates generally graduate to partner much faster than at other firms - after six years with the firm following a clerkship with a federal judge. We had an especially good crop in 2012, when we elected three partners: David Peterson, Joseph Portera and Genevieve Vose. We also brought 12 new associates on board: Davida Brook, Corey Buland, Audrey Calkins, Adam Carlis, Zenobia Harris, Mark Hatch-Miller, Andres Healy, Katherine Kunz, Frances Lewis, Kristen Schlemmer, Ashley Simonsen and Jordan Talge. The future looks bright.

A Brief Review of 2012

Our clients scored major successes with our help in 2012. Read about a sampling of them below.

- More than $1 billion settlement in sudden acceleration case against Toyota. Susman Godfrey partner Marc Seltzer in our Los Angeles office serves as co-lead counsel for the class of people who owned, bought, leased, or insured the residual value of certain Toyota, Lexus, and Scion vehicles. He and the other co-leads negotiated a settlement for in excess of $1 billion on behalf of the class. The district court granted preliminary approval of the settlement on December 28, 2012. In re Toyota Motor Corp. Unintended Acceleration Marketing, Sales Practices, and Products Liability Litigation, No. 8:10-ml-02151 (C.D. Cal).
- Affirmance of license for $200 million prostate cancer drug. Partners from our Seattle, New York, and Los Angeles offices teamed up to defeat the efforts of Medivation, a $3.5 billion dollar pharmaceutical company, to secure exclusive rights to develop a promising prostate cancer drug. Matt Berry, Bill Carmody, and Jacob Buchdahl persuaded the San Francisco Superior Court to grant summary adjudication in favor of our start-up client, Aragon, on December 20. Medivation had valued the drug at more than $200 million. Medivation, Inc. v. The Regents of the University of California, No. CGC-11-510715 (Cal. Super. Ct. San Francisco).
- Fifth Circuit wins in dispute over KBR, Inc.'s proxy materials and Poly-America's use of the color yellow. Houston partners Geoff Harrison and Chanler Langham handled the case for KBR, a global engineering, construction, and services company, and persuaded the panel to uphold the district court's ruling that allowed KBR to reject a shareholder activist's improper proposal. KBR v. Chevedden, 478 Fed. Appx. 213 (5th Cir. June 11, 2012). Another Houston partner, Erica Harris, won affirmance of a district court's ruling after trial in favor of client Poly-America on claims that its use of the color yellow in plastic sheeting did not infringe the plaintiff's trademark and that the plaintiff's trademark was invalid. Poly-America, L.P. v. Stego Industries, LLC, 482 Fed. Appx. 958 (5th Cir. Oct. 27, 2012)

- Patent infringement victory. Houston partner Joseph Grinstein led a four-firm trial team that last May won a $15.4 million patent infringement verdict - and a finding of willfulness - in the Eastern District of Texas in PACT Technologies XPP, AG v. Xilinx, Inc., No. 2:07-cv-563 (E.D. Tex.)
- Voluntary dismissal of government's $300 million False Claims Act lawsuit. Partners Vineet Bhatia, Geoff Harrison, Shawn Raymond, and Rick Hess in the Houston office and Genevieve Vose from Seattle persuaded the U.S. government to dismiss without prejudice a lawsuit concerning our client's charges for private security in Iraq under a contract with the Army. United States v. Kellogg Brown & Root Services, Inc., No. 1:10-cv-00530, Docket No. 143 (D.D.C. Nov. 15, 2012).
- Oil & gas win. In Olympia Minerals, LLC v. HS Resources, LLC, No. C 2005-0927, in the 36th District Court of Beauregard Parish, Louisiana, Dallas partners Barry Barnett and Daniel Charest captained a trial team that in March 2012 obtained a judgment, after trial, for Louisiana mineral owners that claimed breach of a project agreement for development of oil and gas prospects across more than 100 square miles. The court awarded the firm's clients damages of more than $14 million while rejecting defendants' $70+ million counterclaim alleging theft and misuse of 3D seismic data.
- Arbitration shut-out. Houston partners Vineet Bhatia, Shawn Raymond, and Rob Safi defended a large electric utility company in a dispute with one of the world's largest energy companies concerning power production losses at a 100 MW wind farm. After a hearing on the merits, in January 2012, an arbitration panel issued a unanimous decision in favor of our client, rejecting all of the claimant's liability theories and denying all relief that it sought. The panel later awarded our client all of its attorneys' fees.
- Recovery of hundreds of millions in value for Washington Mutual shareholders. Seattle partners Parker Folse, Edgar Sargent, and Justin Nelson represented the Equity Committee in the WaMu bankruptcy. After defeating two reorganization plans that would have wiped out equity completely, they negotiated with the debtor and certain key creditors a resolution that provides shareholders with 95 percent of the post-bankruptcy WaMu plus other assets in a package worth hundreds of millions of dollars. In re Washington Mutual, Inc., No. 08-12229 (Bankr. D. Del.).

Other Items of Interest

Our lawyers did a great many other things during the last year to make us better lawyers, to help our clients, and, yes, to enhance the profession, aid our communities, and improve our system of justice.

Most notably, two of our partners - Neal Manne in Houston and Parker Folse in Seattle - won election in 2012 to the American College of Trial Lawyers, which people widely consider the premier legal professional organization in America. No other firm had more than one.

And in December 2012, the Chief Justice of the United States appointed Parker to the U.S. Judicial Conference Advisory Committee on Civil Rules for a three-year term.

Founding partner Steve Susman in November spoke to a wall-to-wall audience at the University of Pennsylvania Law School about the joy of lawyering.

Steve and Houston partner Trey Peacock also led the "Swift Justice" cycling team - a squadron of SG lawyers from every office - in raising $180,000 to fight multiple sclerosis.

Partner Marc Seltzer received the Los Angeles Jewish Federation's 2012 Bruce I. Hochman Maimonides Torch of Justice Award.

Dallas partner Barry Barnett did something few trial lawyers ever get to do - he argued a case to the U.S. Supreme Court (in Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, No. 11-864 (U.S.)), which the ABA Journal called the class action case "that the business community and plaintiffs bar are watching most closely" this Term).

We've won plaudits from every organization we know of that relies on peer reviews to identify excellence in the legal profession - including top national ratings of the firm by Best Lawyers (Tier 1 for Litigation - Antitrust, Litigation - Intellectual Property, and Litigation - Patent) and top marks by Chambers and Partners as well (Band 1 for Antitrust and Litigation: General Commercial).

In June of last year, Vault announced that its survey of 17,000 law firm associates from throughout the United States ranked Susman Godfrey no. 1 - by a huge margin. SG received 45.6 percent of the associates' votes while the no. 2 firm got only 26.1 percent.

Our lawyers continue to gain individual recognition. By Benchmark Litigation, Best Lawyers, Chambers and Partners, Lawdragon, Legal 500, Martindale-Hubbell, Super Lawyers, and Who's Who Legal, to give a partial list.

Our Thanks to You

We never forget that we have challenging, interesting, and - yes, for us - fun work to do because clients and friends like you entrust us with cases that matter very much to you. They matter very much to us, too. Thank you for letting us help.

Subject: FCOI Disclosure System Problems Today

Colleagues---

After receiving messages from your Campus Conflict of Interest Officer this afternoon, many of you who attempted to access the Financial Conflict of Interest disclosure system have had difficulties. We believe that these problems relate to the demands placed on the system from many people trying to use it simultaneously, but UIS is working hard to identify the exact problems and get them fixed.

I wanted to apologize to you for these problems and any frustration you may have had in trying to make your disclosure. If you have not yet tried to make your disclosure, you may want to wait. We will let you know when the problems have been resolved and will extend the disclosure deadline as necessary.

Thank you.

School and Youth Programs

High School Fall Retreat

Building Bridges and Creating CommUNITY is this year's high school retreat theme. From October 8-10, 200 students from surrounding high schools will head to Camp Wise in Chardon, Ohio to develop their leadership skills and deepen their connection with others. Activities include small group workshops and an interactive art project centered on social justice issues.

Find out more by clicking here!

Grant Awarded for Anti-Stereotype Program

Students across all demographics identify stereotyping as ubiquitous in schools. As a result, The Diversity Center crafted a 45 minute program called #MoreThanAStereotype to combat the daily stereotyping that persists in our communities. In late spring of 2015, The Diversity Center received a grant to work with local Akron schools to promote greater awareness of stereotypes and how to reduce them in our daily lives. This autumn, program staff will provide valuable content to students ages 13-18 and empower them to be change agents in their schools. We look forward to growing the conversation!

John,

Nettie just told me that we're only 24 gifts short of 3,500 online donations for the month.

That would make for a record-breaking month for our campaign!

I don't know whether or not that sounds like a big deal, but for a small Arizona campaign like ours, it could be the difference between winning and losing.

John -- we only have until midnight to break the record. Will you put us over the top?

Great. I suppose it's conceivable that a few organizers could spark a high-profile demonstration or two (a la Occupy) that might turn out to be the spark. But it is indeed a puzzle to figure out why some events, usually with very little planning, ignite a movement no one would have predicted, while other, far better planned things fashioned by experienced organizers don't.

I don't know Kathleen. I could reach out to her through Brian Kettenring, but I suspect that Tara or someone who knows more than I about the players in the field would get more out of it . . .

Subject: Week In Review: Enough about Me. What do you think of me?

February 26, 2016

Dear Friends:

It is said that we humans were given one mouth and two ears for a reason; more than providing us simply with the means to talk, the Good Lord doubled down on our ability to listen. Given his rich endowment in the hearing department, President Obama could really get an earful if he went to Cuba as equipped to receive as he is to transmit.

In expressing this view, we appear to be in the minority. Up to now, every opinion column we've read reacting to his upcoming trip has offered little more than points the writers want him to score, or lists of demands they want him to make.

Some add demands that the President gather together pre-selected groups of Cubans who will say to him exactly what the most determined critics of his policy here in the U.S. want Mr. Obama to hear.

In other words he's being counseled to do exactly what all our previous presidents have done since the Cold War - lecture Cuba's leaders about bending to the will of the United States - the only difference being that his ten predecessors made their speeches without leaving the confines of the White House grounds and seeing Cuba for themselves.

For example, the Washington Post, dead set against the trip from the start, published The President must make the trip to Cuba count, an editorial which asked, "will Mr. Obama address Cubans directly, in places where thousands of ordinary people - not hand-picked party cadres - can see and hear him? Will he visit private businesses? Will he give an interview to Yoani Sánchez, the country's renowned independent journalist?" Unless the president checks every one of these boxes, of course, the Post will mark the trip as having failed.

Elliot Abrams, in "The disgraceful Obama trip to Cuba," a column on the Council on Foreign Relations blog, despairs without evidence that the president is only going to Cuba to have his picture taken with Fidel Castro, and says he can only salvage the trip by meeting with the "right" dissidents and having a "Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall" moment.

Andres Oppenheimer, writing for the Miami Herald, proclaims that a presidential meeting with Cuban civil society "that includes government-paid 'intellectuals,'" would be a sham (we're guessing the air quotes around 'intellectuals' reflects a smidge of condescension), saying Mr. Obama must meet with opposition leaders, many of whom are on our government's payroll, instead.

Writing for the Telegraph, David Blair, a fan of the trip, wants Mr. Obama to be "deeply subversive," and use "his emollient, charisma and 'soft power' - not force and threats - to achieve essentially the same goal, namely political change."

When Susan Rice, the president's national security advisor, tweeted about the trip, she wrote "#Cuba visit will allow @POTUS to discuss progress over 1+ year and, more importantly, continued disagreements, incl. over human rights."

What's striking about all the advice the president received is its conceit; namely, if you are traveling to Cuba, you should come prepared to lecture rather than listen since, apparently, you can't learn anything by going there that you didn't already know before you left.

In fairness, the president is not immune from such thinking himself. During last Saturday's radio address, he offered a detailed list of what he plans to say to President Castro and others, but mentioned listening just once, when he promised to learn from Cuban entrepreneurs "how we can help them start new ventures."

That's a shame, since this suggests he is narrowing what could otherwise be an exciting conversation with those small business owners. Even more, he seems to be ruling out the chance for an unstructured back and forth with any of the roughly 70% of adult Cubans - the college professors, the physicians, the women taking care of kids in day care, the dancers in the National Ballet, or the hardworking guys carrying bags in hotels - who remain on the payrolls of the state. As if their aspirations, hopes, and dreams for the future simply didn't count for as much as the opinions of the island's honorable but self-employed minority.

To be sure, when the president goes to Cuba in March, he'll be mobbed and loved by the Cuban people, which in turn will have a disruptive effect on Cuba's political equation itself. Cuba's leaders know this, which is a powerful answer to the baseless accusation that Mr. Obama got no concessions from Cuba's government before announcing his visit in the first place. When he gets there, the President will, of course, say what he thinks must be said, reflecting his own values, our country's Cold War legacy, and the demands of our politics, while also celebrating and consolidating the real achievements of his policy.

But, it would also be nice if he were to balance the gamesmanship with the kind of statesmanship that Mr. Obama, a president who lived overseas in the developing world during his youth, can uniquely offer. It's as simple as meeting a genuine cross-section of Cubans and asking them about their lives. Given the chance, the ones we know would just let it rip, and you can't be a more respectful or effective guest then by inviting them to do exactly that and then listening to what they have to say.

Our Recommendations

U.S. / Cuba Relations

Kerry plans to go to Cuba in 'next week or two', Yahoo News / AFP

Secretary of State John Kerry has announced that he may travel to Cuba in the coming weeks to discuss human rights. This would be Kerry's second trip to Cuba, serving as a follow-up to his visit last August for the reopening of the U.S. Embassy in Havana.

The Secretary of State's visit would come just weeks before President Barack Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama's historic trip to the island on March 21-22.

Most approve of Obama's Cuba Visit, Peter Moore, YouGov

Following the announcement of President Obama's upcoming trip to Cuba, YouGov released a poll that records U.S. public support for Mr. Obama's Cuba policy and a sizable increase in the percentage of Americans who view Cuba favorably. Full polling data, broken down by political affiliation, income, race, age, gender, and geographic region can be found here.

Obama, nos vemos en La Habana, Miriam Leiva, Cubamet

In this opinion column, Miriam Leiva welcomes U.S. President Barack Obama's upcoming trip to Cuba. She sees the visit as a positive move that will not only be remembered as the first visit to Cuba by a U.S. president since 1928, but as a milestone in Obama's efforts to seize every opportunity to strengthen U.S. relations with Cuba through enthusiasm, opportunity, and respect.

**Cuba allows seven dissidents to travel abroad ahead of Obama visit** , Daniel Trotta and Nelson Acosta, News Daily

Seven Cuban dissidents have been given a one-time offer by Cuba's government to travel abroad. Four other former prisoners have however, been denied. The move is being seen as a gesture by Cuba's government in the lead-up to President Obama's visit. A White House spokesman says that the administration "welcome[s] the news" and is hopeful that the Cuban government will allow the remaining four dissidents to travel.

**Even as Cuban relations warm, Obama renews state of emergency against Cuba**, Gregory Korte, USA Today

On Wednesday, President Obama renewed a twenty-year old state of emergency against Cuba. The renewal order, known as Proclamation 9398, prohibits U.S.-registered vessels and aircraft from entering Cuban waters or airspace without authorization. Under the National Emergencies Act, the president must renew the proclamation each year. While Obama has issued the renewal, the proclamation notably uses softer language and emphasizes peacemaking and democracy promotion objectives in Cuba.

**U.S. fines French firm for doing business with Cuba** , Xinhua

The U.S. Treasury Department fined a French firm, CGG Services, $614,250 for using "spare parts and equipment of U.S. origin on oil and gas exploration vessels operating in Cuban territorial waters." The Treasury Department claims CGG violated the U.S. trade embargo still in place against Cuba. Despite significant steps toward normalization, the U.S. government has fined companies working with Cuba 14.4 billion dollars for such violations since 2009.

**D.C. looks to communist Cuba for lessons to improve literacy** , Ryan M. McDermott, The Washington Times

"Given Cuba's emphasis on a strong education, I know there's a lot we can learn from each other," said Washington, D.C. Mayor Muriel Bowser. Bowser's Tuesday comments came during a five-day trip to Cuba. Bowser and School Chancellor Kaya Henderson visited a number of schools in Cuba, including the University of Havana, a middle school, and a trade school. Cuba boasts a 99% literacy rate, while approximately 64% of D.C. residents are functionally literate.

**Factory OK'd For Cuba Aims To Plow A Path Into 21st Century** , Melissa Block, NPR

This story features tractor manufacturers Horace Clemmons and Saul Berenthal, the first businessmen approved by the US government to build a factory in Cuba since 1960. Their business, Cleber LLC, will produce a small tractor model called Oggun starting in 2017 in the Mariel Special Development Zone. Oggun is the name of the Santeria deity known as the god of metal. Berenthal, a Cuban American, believes "This is the path to get Cuba into the 21st century."

**Cuba's Had A Lung Cancer Vaccine For Years, And Now It's Coming To The U.S.**, Erin Schumaker and Anna Almendrala, Huffington Post

Originally published in May 2015, this updated article includes new details on CimaVax, a lung cancer treatment and vaccine developed in Cuba continues to be of interest in the U.S. The vaccine, which has been researched and tested in Cuba over the past 25 years, was first introduced to the public in 2011. The decision to introduce CimaVax - which has had initial successes in both the Cuban and European markets - to the United States, follows New York Governor Andrew Cuomo's trade delegation to Cuba last April. Roswell Park Cancer Institute, the research center evaluating CimaVax, still has obstacles to overcome including licensing restrictions and FDA approval.

**Five Steps to Grow the Cuban Economy - What the US and Cuba Can Do in**

Obama's Final Year, Michael W. Klein and Pavel Vidal, Atlantic Council

The Atlantic Council's Adrienne Arsht Latin America Center released a report on Thursday that highlights five steps the U.S. and Cuba can take in the coming years to improve the Cuban economy: financial liberalization; monetary unification and reform; banking for cuentapropistas: small-scale lending and microfinance; banking for un tipo común y corriente: services for depositors; and international integration.

Miami Mini Maker Faire Proudly Presents "Music Makers Showcase" , Miami Mini Maker Faire

Last Saturday, Miami Mini Maker Faire, an all-ages festival of creativity and innovation, hosted its third annual "Music Makers Showcase." One of the headlining acts was X Alfonso, a Grammy-nominated pioneer of Cuba's hip-hop and afro-rock scenes. In his home town of Havana, Cuba, X Alfonso is also the founding director of Fabrica de Arte Cubano, an acclaimed mixed arts and performance space.

Cuba y China, acuerdos sobre agricultura y ferrocarriles \(Cuba and China sign an agreement on agriculture and railways\), Iramsy Peraza, Progreso Semanal

Vice President of the Chinese Eximbank and Cuba's Vice President of Finances and Prices, Félix Martínez have signed an agreement that will help develop Cuba's agricultural sector and railways. In addition to providing 240 passenger railroad cars, the deal with Eximbank will provide Cuba with bulk carriers, tractors, rice-drying plants, facilities for seed processing, and other equipment used in agricultural plans aimed at increasing food production in the country.

Cuba deploys army in effort to avoid Zika virus , Marc Frank and Daniel Trotta, Thomson Reuters

Cuba's President Raul Castro has declared a nationwide call to action against the Zika virus. On Monday, Castro mobilized 9000 soldiers to stave off the mosquito-borne illness. No cases have been reported in Cuba to date, but the World Health Organization anticipates that Zika - which has spread rapidly throughout Latin America and the Caribbean in the past months following an initial outbreak in Brazil - will spread to every country in the Western Hemisphere except Canada and Chile.

Florida cattleman recalls Ramón Castro's role in Cuba agriculture , Mimi Whitefield, Miami Herald

This week, Cuba mourned the death of Ramón Castro. The eldest Castro brother's life and legacy, however, has been celebrated beyond the shores of Cuba. "His death represents a lot more than just the passing of the oldest brother of Fidel and Raúl Castro," said John Parke Wright IV, a Florida cattleman who first met Castro at the Havana International Fair in the late 1990s. "Ramón Castro represents individual agricultural excellence." Unlike his brothers, Ramón Castro largely avoided politics, following instead in his father's footsteps as a giant in Cuban agriculture.

Gordon Brown wants to meet with Ecom team in lieu of BO

Dan Tarullo, or others - Advisory Bd members?

They're also looking at doing a DC event before the G20 - with either cfr or brookings, I told them they should do cap, but they're worried about the optics of that...I pointed out 43's a lame duck now.

Just talked to GB, who wonders if some of the Obama economic experts team might be up for meeting him while he is in DC. People like Volcker, Tyson, Rubin, Reich, Ferguson, Summers and Geithner. I guess one of those likely to be Treasury Sec.

What do you think - whom should I contact to pursue?

Thanks for your help S

Usually Roy does the boasting, but we were pretty happy when the reviewer at Ad Age (the Bible in the ad world) named our Radio Shack spot the best spot in the Super Bowl. We did some serious celebrating today!

Subject: if the worst happens

Listen John:

We can't let the GOP pick up a bigger majority in Congress. That would cause the final two years of President Obama's term to be a disaster. Here is why:

- Even more attacks on women and their access to affordable healthcare
- A Congress that refuses to raise the minimum wage while giving HUGE tax breaks to their special interest allies
- Nonstop attempts to attack the president and even possible impeachment!

We can't stop this from happening on our own though. We need another $60,000 by Friday at 6 pm so that we can expose the truth about the Tea Party's real agenda. So John, can you click here and donate before we place another round of TV buys on Friday?

If you've saved your payment information with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately:

Donate \$3 instantly

Donate \$15 instantly

Donate \$25 instantly

Or donate another amount instantly

Every donation that we receive goes to work to stop the Tea Party. Standing with us means that we can avert their attempts to ruin the president's last two years.

John, can you stand with the president and donate before it's too late?

Thanks for all you do,

Ali

Hi Haim -- Puder has volunteered to circulate the HRC letter. They would love your opinion on the attached press release (with your quote in it) that will be distributed with the entire HRC letter attached to it. Please LMK if you think any changes should be made. In my view, the title may be a little much, but the body is reflective of the letter and your quote.

I'm sure the admin could pull off the task force described but it seems premature to have this worked in the transition.

If there are early 09 decisions that need to be made we should pull into transition. Otherwise I'd leave it to white house staff.

Subject: Olympics

David, so great to see you Wednesday, you looked 3 inches taller. Just wait till you get to the West Wing and have to deal with cleaning up 8 years of mess :)

Here are some very top line thoughts. I know you have a massive pile in front of you and I didn't want to overwhelm you nor over step my boundaries. That being said, if you would like, I would be delighted to write you a larger planning document for your return from your vacation.

In order to secure the Olympics for Chicago, the most important thing was achieved Tuesday with Senator Obama being elected. That being said, there are some major challenges still ahead of us and some quick deadlines to meet.

Just to recap the time line for you, the IOC will be visiting Chicago the end of March, beginning of April for their evaluation visit. Assuming that goes well, Chicago will move to the final round where the winner of the 2016 games will be announced in Copenhagen, Denmark in October of 09.

The challenges ahead of us are still great starting with the way our government approaches the games. As you probably know, we are the only country that does not have an official "minister" of sport in our government nor does our government provide financial guarantees for the game. Neither of these are deal breakers for us, however, it is critical that IOC sees that the new administration is prepared to be active partners in working with the IOC. To that point, I think it would be very helpful to have someone working on the olympic work stream during the transition (probably at State makes the most sense). There is currently a very low level person out of Karen Hughes shop at State that is coordinating for this administration. For us to succeed, we will need to elevate this person and to enhance the cooperation between the administration, congress and the USOC. As Chicago gets ready to submit it's final materials for the IOC's visit, it would be huge to be able to show the engagement and planning that the new administration is already taking part in.

This team and planning can be phased in during the next steps of the bid. If Chicago is chosen, President Obama should be prepared to immediately name a task force within his administration and in conjunction with the USOC and the bid committee. During the Salt Lake games, the head of public liaison and the head of cabinet affairs were tasked with this.

Lastly, the USOC needs to bring in new leadership for their Washington operation. The current head of the office is a Nixon alum. While the USOC is a stand alone entity, I am confident that their CEO, Jim Scherr, would be happy for this new administration's input. As a side note, Jim is just fantastic. While I ran the first phase of the Chicago bid, he was a real pro to work with and I think a loud advocate in private for Chicago's bid (his twin brother works for Goldman in Chicago and is an Olympic medal holder).

I hope this is helpful. Let me know what I can do to assist you and President elect Obama in making sure Chicago wins the bid. Have an awesome vacation!!

| Subject: | Fall 2014 Exams, Papers, Feedback Memos DUE BY NOON ON FRIDAY, JAN 30 (CORRECTION TO EMAIL ADDRESS) |

Dear Faculty,

If you have not already done so, please provide us with the final exams, final papers, and any feedback memo for your class, no later than noon on Friday, January 30, 2015. Please deliver/mail your students' exams, final papers, and feedback memo to us at:

Georgetown Law
Office of the Registrar, ATT: EXAM REVIEW
600 New Jersey Avenue, NW
315 McDonough Hall
Washington, DC 20001

Your exam questions, any 'best' exam, 'best' paper, and/or feedback memo will be uploaded to the Law Library's restricted website. We will make final exams, final papers, and any feedback memos available to students through our Exam Review process which begins on Tuesday, February 2, 2015.

Please note that if you choose not to return your exams and final papers to us, please be reminded that the ABA requires that these documents be kept for one year unless they are turned over to your student(s). Students requesting their exams or papers will be directed to you to retrieve their exams or papers.

Please contact Manager of Records, Dinah Maurelus, at 202-662-9119 or dm1217@law.georgetown.edu , if you have any questions.

John and Amanda will come to the Finance Strategy Session following the Senate Caucus briefing. Worst case, John and Amanda arrive to help with the Q&A portion of the event.

Thoughts?

Robby and Mike just discussed having John and Amanda (or just John) do the Senate meeting, since it will be logistically difficult and perhaps not necessary for the 3 of them to do both meetings. Robby would go to the finance meeting at 2pm and John and Amanda could potentially come at the end.

Hi Brynne-

Thanks for this. As Nick says, Mikulski meeting is set for 12:00pm (Hart 503). The Finance Roadshow starts at 2:30pm across the city (thankfully, since 2PM would be very tough for them to make). Right now we still need to confirm precise timing on the drinks with DeLauro's staff. We're reaching out now and will keep you updated.

John's schedule is pretty packed this afternoon. We'll check on 2/30/2:45 pm with John, but that's his only possible window that he was planning to use to prep for tomorrow. We won't know for sure until he's back from the Charlie Rose filming around 1:30/1:45 pm. Also an evening call could work-- after 9pm?

8:30am RVA Finance Meeting (John, Robby, and Amanda)

1:00pm Senate Caucus Meeting (John, Robby, and Amanda)

2:00pm Washington D.C. Finance Meeting (John, Robby, Marlon and Amanda)

7:30pm Informal House Meet & Greet at Congresswoman's DeLauro's house (John, Robby, Marlon and Amanda)

I know there has been talk about a meeting with Mikulski, when is that supposed to take place?

Also, Marissa, Eryn/Milia, and Nick we need to get your bosses on the phone to discuss what they're presenting to the Senate Caucus today.

Please let me know if there is anything I'm missing.

Hi John,

I hope you are well as can be in these crazy times. My start at CAP got a little upended by our little guy's early arrival (he sent us to Sibley on my last official day at DoD)! But he's awful cute, and doing well.

I know time is scarce, but I hope we can get together in the next couple of weeks.

Let me know. I'll be in full swing by the end of the month and have started to get to know all the ins and outs and personalities. I'm loving it and only bummed that you are not still right downstairs.

Best,

Vikram

JOHN PODESTA

A few weeks ago, we told you one of the Koch brothers inked a MASSIVE personal check to Ann's opponent.

We knew this would get you FIRED UP -- but we NEVER expected what happened next.

As of 7AM, we're within reach of 4,000 online donations for Ann -- just in August!!!

THAT'D BE A NEW RECORD!

BUT -- the Arizona Republican primary is TODAY.

If we can hit the mark before polls close, it'll send a LOUD AND CLEAR message to the Kochs: we don't want your money in Arizona.

If we fall short, Arizona's 1st district could be in DEEP trouble.

Subject: [big campaign] Petition: Tell House GOP to Stop Using Taxpayer Money to Fund Election-Year Political Project 'America Speaking Out'

www.AmericansUnitedforChange.org

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

May 25, 2010

Jeremy Funk, 202-470-5878

New Petition: Tell House Republicans to Cease Using Taxpayer Money to Fund Overtly Political, Election-Year Initiative 'America Speaking Out'

What Hypocrisy: On Heels of Their Widely Ridiculed 'YouCut' Gimmick for Saving Taxpayer Money, House GOP Force Taxpayers to Fund Political Project for Winning Mid-Term Elections

MUST READ: 'Washington Monthly: AMERICA SPEAKING OUT -- WITH AMERICA FOOTING THE BILL'

Washington DC – Americans United for Change launched an online petition today calling on House Republicans to immediately give back any and all taxpayer money being used to fund an overtly political project called "America Speaking Out" -- a messaging initiative akin to the famous 'Contract With America' effort that the GOP campaigned on in 1994. However, unlike 'Contract With America,' the Republican leadership are financing "America Speaking Out" with taxpayer dollars through Congress instead of through the Republican National Committee. While the Republican leadership claims this effort is intended to guide their "policy," it reportedly won't be fully unveiled until September – two months before the mid-term elections and without any time left in the legislative session – raising serious questions for America's taxpayers about whether they should be footing the bill for a Republican political project designed to regain control of the House of Representatives.

CLICK HERE to view the petition 'We Won't Pay For GOP Campaigns!' and see below for the email going out today to activists across the nation. In addition, see also a first draft of the new GOP 'Contract With America' that Americans United for Change recently offered to the Republican Leadership:

http://www.americansunitedforchange.org/press/releases/republican\_contract\_with\_america/

Tom McMahon, Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "Just days after launching their 'YouCut' gimmick for saving taxpayer dollars that was widely ridiculed for, at best, cutting 0.017 percent of the federal budget, House Republicans are now trying to get away with charging their political project for mid-term election strategy on the government credit card. What hypocrisy and nerve. Who do they think they're fooling claiming that their 'Contract With America'-style initiative is anything but a political blueprint when they plan to unveil it two months from the mid-term elections, right before they break for recess? If the Republicans behind the original Contract With America thought it was too political to make taxpayers pay for it, what makes this class think they can get away with it? They can't and they won't. House Republicans must cease and desist forcing taxpayers to pick up the tab for blatant election-year political activity and pay back every dime they've wasted to date."

Background: House Republicans Say "American Speaking Out" Is All About "Policy"

Roll Call, 5/25/10: House Republicans on Tuesday will kick off their effort to craft a new agenda with the launch of a website called AmericaSpeakingOut.com, with the intent of releasing a final document in September. But the agenda will not map the GOP path to victory through the midterm elections; instead it will serve as a policy guide for the rest of the 111th Congress, Republican leaders insist. The current House calendar anticipates an Oct. 8 adjournment.

But the GOP Congressman Behind the Effort Admits It's All About Regaining the "Majority"

ABC News, 5/25/10 : "There are a number of seats that you get just by being 'no.'" Rep. Kevin McCarthy, the California Republican spearheading the effort, told ABC News . "But you don't get a majority by just being 'no.' You've got to say what you're for."

FOR CHANGE

Dear Friend,

You are paying for the Republicans' 2010 political campaign.

Today the House leadership unveiled a new project to set their campaign platform. But instead of paying for this through the Republican National Committee they are financing it with taxpayer dollars through Congress. At the same time they are refusing to extend unemployment benefits or to work to help fix the problems they created.

Tell GOP Eric Cantor and Kevin McCarthy, to return taxpayer dollars and fund their campaigns using private donations.

STOP

TAKE ACTION

It's amazing that they claim to be worried about the deficit and spending when they pull stunts like this. They want to claim this is isn't about the 2010 elections but in quotes to newspapers this morning both Eric Cantor and Kevin McCarthy admitted that this is all about electing Republicans in November. And it's being financed by your tax dollars.

This latest stunt is insulting. As we are looking for ways to compromise and fix this nation, such a blatant misuse of public funds and our trust is unacceptable. We should not be paying for their campaign.

Send the Republicans a message. Tell them to return tax payer money and stop the GOP bailouts.

Help us hold the GOP accountable and demand our money back.

Jeremy

Subject: Labor Update

Good evening-

Tomorrow AM the United Brotherhood of Carpenter's endorsement statement will release. Our statement and a digital video is ready to release immediately afterwards. Following up on a labor strategy meeting we hosted with Robby last week, I wanted to provide a quick update.

Update:

1. We continue to make progress with the NEA moving toward a possible October 1-3rd endorsement vote. I ask that we continue to hold the October 3rd Executive Board presentation date in Washington DC with HRC's schedule.
2. We continue to work on a labor drum beat of endorsements through the coming weeks. Three endorsements are immediately in that mix. 1. IAFF 2. IUPAT (Painters) 3. IUOE (Operating Engineers) There is potentially a step for each to do.

IAFF-Their candidate questionnaire is due September 30th. I need that back completed timely. Iowa team has requested October 6th or 7th as a endorsement date. Kevin O'Connor has not been super responsive. After tomorrow, I will request a call from Robby into Schaitberger to nail down.

IUPAT-HRC will be in Las Vegas on October 14th. President Ken Rigmaiden will fly out to endorse her at their training facility. I have confirmed this. Can we confirm HRC to carve out 45 mins in Vegas to accept their endorsement and do a quick tour?

IUOE-I have provided Amanda a 30 minute IUOE Executive Board call sheet for HRC. I understand there is potentially available time on HRC's schedule on Monday, September 28th while in CA to complete this call. It will be a short address and a few Q&A. This will lock in their endorsement.

3. I am circling back on nailing down a date for the AFT Teacher Town Hall, we need to get this locked in this week.

4. I have submitted call sheets to move and/or track endorsements for both HRC and John Podesta tonight. They breakdown like this:

HRC: Doug McCarron (Carpenters President-THANK YOU!), IUOE EBoard call and Kenny Riley (important labor leader in SC)

Podesta: Mary Beth Cahill, Larry Hanley and Chris Shelton (all check ins)

Happy to discuss.

Hi John- to follow up on our conversation before I had Mae and Mary added to the VIP list, which means they'll get to wait in a shorter line and stand in the VIP section for the speech. Can you send me (or tell me tomorrow) the name of the third guest so I can add her to the list as well? I think this means that their names will just be on a list at the entrance, but I'll check tomorrow to see if they need printed tickets as well.

I'm still working on your logistics but you'll enter through the VIP entrance with them (you're on that list already) and have the ability to hang out until you go backstage with HRC. I will work with the advance staff to make sure that's all coordinated. They confirmed with me tonight that they still haven't solidified many of the movement details for Saturday but definitely have you on their radar.

Can chat more tomorrow.

Thanks!

Subject: Budgeting for Climate Change and other news from Dan Lashof, NextGen Climate America

President Obama released his FY2016 budget this week and it clearly reflects the priority he is placing on confronting climate change. The budget documents, for the first time, include a chapter devoted to the costs the federal government is incurring as a result of extreme weather. The upshot is that dealing with climate change is not just the right thing to do, it is the fiscally conservative thing to do, as I describe here:

<https://nextgenamerica.org/climate-change/budgeting-for-climate-change/>

The budget itself also includes increased investments in clean energy as well as a new program to encourage states to exceed the pollution reduction targets contained in the Clean Power Plan. Aaron Burgess has the breakdown here:

<https://nextgenamerica.org/climate-change/investing-in-americas-future/>

Meanwhile, as the Keystone XL approval bill moves towards the President's desk for an expected veto, TransCanada is hedging its bets with an investment in oil-by-rail and arguing that it will get tar sands oil to the U.S. with or without Keystone. As usual, TransCanada's argument doesn't stand up to scrutiny. Tom Steyer provides the scrutiny in The Huffington Post:

Subject: Environmental Majority Council Update

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

In the face of the most anti-environment House of Representatives in history, LCV has succeeded in leveraging our unique blend of insider tactics and outsider pressure to make progress on climate change and to protect our air, water and wild places.

Your partnership in this work continues to have a real impact. Already you've helped mobilize tens of thousands of LCV members across the country to call on President Obama to take decisive steps to curb dangerous carbon pollution. And, you've helped urge his administration to use the bully pulpit to elevate the issue of climate disruptions and climate solutions in the public discourse.

So I hope you were as proud as I was when President Obama went before Congress and drew a line in the sand for Congress to act on climate change. Congratulations and thank you. Our journey is far from over, but we are moving forward.

Enjoy the Environmental Majority Council update below and as always, please reach out if you have any questions or feedback.

Onward,

Gene

"For the sake of our children and our future, we must do more to combat climate change...If Congress won't act soon to protect future generations, I will."

- President Obama, 2013 State of the Union address

LCV Announces 2012 National Environmental Scorecard

The League of Conservation Voters recently released the 2012 National Environmental Scorecard, the go-to yard stick for evaluating the environmental records of members of congress for more than 40 years. Here's the score for 2012:

- 85 House members and 37 Senators earned a score of 90 percent or greater on the 2012 Scorecard.
- 175 House members and 17 Senators earned an abysmal score of 10 percent or less.
- The average House score in 2012 was 42 percent and the average Senate score was 56 percent.

Of course, you already know much of this. Given the high stakes before us, we need to reach millions more people to ensure they know how their legislator is voting. That's why we've completely overhauled our Scorecard website to make it easier for you to access and share the information not just from this year, but every year since the National Environmental Scorecard was first released in 1971. If you haven't yet seen it, I hope you will take a look by clicking here.

"Forward on Climate" Rally

On Sunday, February 17th, over 40,000 environmental activists from across the country gathered on the National Mall in Washington, DC to urge President Obama to take action on climate policy. The "Forward on Climate" event was the largest climate rally in U.S. history. To read more about the rally, please click here and also check out the photo below of the LCV team in action during the rally.

LCV's National Poll on Climate Change Released

Earlier this month, LCV released a poll conducted before the President's State of the Union address which showed an overwhelming majority of American voters view climate change as a real and tangible problem, with 61% saying the effects of climate change are already affecting them personally or will in their lifetime. Sixty-five percent of Americans support "the President taking significant steps to address climate change now," including 89 percent of Democrats, 62 percent of independents and 38 percent of Republicans.

To read more about the poll and its results, please read our detailed memo or check out this Huffington Post article on the poll.

LCV & State LCVs Annual Conference in May

Please join me for LCV and State LCVs Annual Conference, which will be held on May 2-4, 2013 in Grand Rapids, Michigan. We are at a crossroads. We can either rebuild power to solve the greatest environmental challenges before us, or we can allow special interests to gut longstanding environmental regulations and foster inaction on the climate crisis. The next generation is counting on us to safeguard our planet. With your partnership, we will succeed.

Join environmental leaders from around the country for an up close experience of what makes the LCV state/national network so strategic and effective. If interested in attending or to learn more, please contact Josh Hicks at (202) 454-4565 or josh\_hicks@lcv.org. This is one conference you don't want to miss!

GiveGreen: Because not all money is "green"

Recently, LCV Action Fund endorsed Congressman Ed Markey, who is running for the U.S. Senate in Massachusetts. Congressman Markey has earned an impressive LCV lifetime score of 94%. Even more importantly, there's no greater environmental champion in Congress than Ed Markey. He has made addressing the climate crisis and advancing clean energy the cause of his career. He has also been the biggest champion of the effort to protect the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. He'll be a true leader in the United States Senate. To read more about LCV Action Fund's endorsement of Rep. Ed Markey for U.S. Senate, please click here.

We hope you will join us in supporting Congressman Ed Markey, who is featured on LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen website, www.givegreen.com, the only bundling website devoted exclusively to raising money for environmental champions and candidates. Bundling through GiveGreen magnifies the power of your contribution by calling attention to the environmental values that drive you to support the candidate in the first place.

Book Attacking Obama Hopes to Repeat '04 Anti-Kerry Feat

By JIM RUTENBERG and JULIE BOSMAN

In the summer of 2004 the conservative gadfly Jerome R. Corsi shot to the top of the best-seller lists as co-author of "Unfit for Command," the book attacking Senator John Kerry's record on a Vietnam War Swift boat that began the larger, damaging campaign against Mr. Kerry's war credentials as he sought the presidency.

Almost exactly four years after that campaign began, Mr. Corsi has released a new attack book painting Senator Barack Obama as a stealth radical liberal who has tried to cover up "extensive connections to Islam" — Mr. Obama is Christian — and questioning whether Mr. Obama's admitted experimentation with drugs during high school and college ever ceased.

Significant portions of the book, released by Threshold Editions, a division of Simon & Schuster that has as its chief editor, Mary Matalin, the former Republican operative turned publisher-pundit, have already been challenged as misleading or false in the days since it made its debut on Aug. 1.

But it is to make its first appearance on The New York Times best-seller list for nonfiction hardcovers this Sunday — at No. 1. The book is pushed along by a large volume of bulk sales, intense voter interest in Senator Obama and an aggressive marketing campaign that already has included 100 author interviews with talk radio hosts across the country, like Sean Hannity and G. Gordon Liddy, Mr. Corsi said on Tuesday.

It is a significant, early success for Ms. Matalin's three-year-old imprint, Threshold Editions, which is also planning to publish the memoirs of Karl Rove, President Bush's longtime political guru. The publishing house says it has undertaken an aggressive printing effort for anticipated demand, with 475,000 copies of "The Obama Nation" produced so far.

"The goal is to defeat Obama," Mr. Corsi said in a telephone interview. "I don't want Obama to be in office." He said he was also planning to assist several conservative groups that intend to run advertisements against Mr. Obama this fall, though he would not name them. Mr. Corsi, who has over the years written critically about Senator John McCain as well, said he supported the Constitution Party presidential nominee, Chuck Baldwin, and had not been in touch with McCain aides. He called his reporting on Mr. Obama, which he stands by, "investigative," not prosecutorial.

Ms. Matalin said in an interview that the book "was not designed to be, and does not set out to be, a political book," calling it, rather, "a piece of scholarship, and a good one at that." She said she was unaware of efforts to link the book to any anti-Obama advertising.

In its timing, authorship and style of reportage, the book is strikingly reminiscent of the book that Mr. Corsi wrote with his co-author, John O'Neill, about Mr. Kerry, "Unfit for Command," which included various charges that were ultimately undermined by news reports pointing out the contradictions. (Some critics against Mr. Kerry quoted in the book had earlier praised his bravery in incidents they were charging he had fabricated; one of them had earned a medal for bravery in a gun battle he accused Mr. Kerry of concocting.)

But books like "Unfit for Command," which remained for some 12 weeks on the Times best-seller list, and, now, "The Obama Nation," have become an effective and favored delivery system for political attacks. There have been anti-Clinton (both Bill and Hillary) and anti-Bush tomes too numerous to name. The sensational findings in these books, whether dubious or true, can quickly come to dominate the larger political discussion in the media, especially on cable television and the less readily detectible confines of talk radio and partisan Web sites.

Fact-checking the books can require extensive labor and time from independent journalists, whose work often trails behind the media echo chamber.

Web sites on the left have begun poring over Mr. Corsi's latest book. Media Matters, which is run by David Brock, a former right-wing journalist who wrote a classic of the genre, "The Real Anita Hill," has been particularly aggressive in fact-checking the book, and its press releases on inaccuracies in the book have gotten some attention on television programs on cable.

Several of the book's charges, in fact, are unsubstantiated, misleading or inaccurate.

For instance, Mr. Corsi writes that Mr. Obama had "yet to answer" whether he "stopped using marijuana and cocaine completely in college, or whether his drug usage extended to his law school days or beyond," asking, "How about in the U.S. Senate?"

But Mr. Obama, who admitted to occasional marijuana and cocaine use during his high school and early college years, wrote in his memoir that he had "stopped getting high" when he moved to New York in the early 1980s. And in an interview in 2003 with The State Journal-Register of Springfield, Ill., he said in response to questions of his drug use, "By the time I was 20, I don't think I indulged again."

In an interview, Mr. Corsi said Mr. Obama's word was not to be trusted because "self-reporting, by people who have used drugs, as to when they stopped is inherently unreliable."

In exploring Mr. Obama's denials that he had been present for the more incendiary sermons of his former pastor, the Rev. Jeremiah Wright, Mr. Corsi cites a report in the conservative Web site NewsMax.com that Mr. Obama had attended a sermon on July 22, 2007, in which Mr. Wright blamed "the 'white arrogance' of America's Caucasian majority for the world's suffering, especially the oppression of blacks." Mr. Obama was giving a speech in Florida that afternoon, and his campaign reported he had not attend Mr. Wright's church that day. William Kristol, a columnist for The New York Times, had cited the same report in a column, but issued a correction. "There is a dispute about the date, and Kristol chose to side with Obama," Mr. Corsi said. "We can nitpick the date to death," Mr. Corsi said, saying his "fundamental point" was Mr. Obama's close association with someone ascribing to "black liberation theology" like Mr. Wright.

Mr. Corsi described most of the critiques of his book as "nitpicking," like a contradiction of his claim in the book that Mr. Obama had failed to dedicate his book "Dreams of My Father" to his family; Mr. Obama dedicated the book to several family members, in the introduction. He called the Media Matters critique inconsequential because it was forwarding a liberal, political agenda.

Media Matters was created in part to answer a conservative "echo chamber" — one that liberal activists say they have still yet to match — that gives books like Mr. Corsi's extra bounce. "There's just no doubt that in terms of longer term infrastructure, there's more out there on the right than there is on the left," said Cliff Schechter, author of a liberal attack book on Mr. McCain, "The Real McCain," which, with 35,000 copies in print, did not hit The New York Times bestseller list.

Mr. Obama's campaign has yet to weigh in heavily on the charges itself in Mr. Corsi's book, appearing to face the classic decision between the risk of publicizing the book's claims by addressing them and the risk of letting them sink into the public debate with no response.

"This book is nothing but a series of lies that were long ago discredited, written by an individual who was discredited after he wrote a similar book to help George Bush and Dick Cheney get reelected four years ago," said Tommy Vietor, a spokesman for Mr. Obama. "We will respond to these smears forcefully, with all means necessary."

Several Democrats associated with Mr. Kerry's campaign in 2004 said in interviews Tuesday that they were comfortable so far with Mr. Obama's more muted response to the book, which has not showed up yet in television advertisements.

Even Mr. Corsi said this book did not have what "Unfit for Command" had: a built-in interest group, the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, to run advertisements against its target.

While he said he thought it was a certainty that he would be "assisting in the creation of ads in the fall," he did not say what he believed their content would be.

Obama: Don't fund independent groups

By: Ben Smith

May 13, 2008 03:18 PM EST

Senator Barack Obama's campaign is steering the candidate's wealthy supporters away from independent Democratic groups, calling into question what had been expected to be the groups' central role in this year's Democratic offensive against Senator John McCain.

Obama's national finance chairwoman, Chicago hotel mogul Penny Pritzker, told supporters at a national finance committee meeting in Indianapolis May 2, and in other conversations, not to give money to the groups, people familiar with her comments said.

"From the beginning of this race Obama has told supporters that if they want to help his effort, they should do so through his campaign," said Obama spokesman Bill Burton, who confirmed that Pritzker has told donors not to give to the groups. "And he means exactly what he says."

Most presidential candidates say they don't encourage the outside groups, and donors are accustomed to taking those words with a grain of salt. The candidates' words are typically seen as mere legal defenses against allegations that the campaigns are illicitly coordinating with outside groups.

The donors have been considering entreaties from Progressive Media USA, run by conservative-journalist turned liberal media critic David Brock; from former Clinton aide John Podesta's Fund for America; and from America Votes, a group backed by billionaire George Soros that focuses on voter mobilization, among other efforts.

But in recent days, major donors have begun to conclude that Obama is serious in trying to cut off funds to the outside groups.

"It's given donors pause," said one prominent Democratic donor of Pritzker's words.

Donors and Democratic activists have been quietly debating Obama's motives: Is he simply interested in keeping his Democratic efforts within his campaign, which is so well funded he doesn't need outside help? Or is he, as some believe, cutting off funds to groups whose leaders – Brock and Podesta – some Obama aides view as too tightly linked to Clinton?

In either case, Pritzker's words are the latest in Obama's remarkably swift and complete consolidation of Democratic Party power. It's an unprecedented seizure of control that has built him, over the course of a year, the most powerful field organization and the largest financial network in American politics, leaving many existing structures – traditional party organizations in many states, the Clintons' long-nurtured national network – in the dust.

Just last summer, Matt Bai's widely accepted analysis identified the "billionaires" and the "bloggers" as the key, emergent players in the Democratic Party's infrastructure. But Obama has marginalized both groups. Pritzker's words are part of a move to keep Obama's grip on the sole important funnel of Democratic money this year. And his campaign has largely ignored the existing network of liberal bloggers, and actively opposes their embrace of fierce partisanship.

"Obama has created a number of significant infrastructure pieces through his campaign, displacing traditional groups the way he promised he would by signaling the end of the old politics of division and partisanship," the blogger Matt Stoller wrote recently of Obama's "consolidation of the party," which he called "stunning."

Many of the figures Obama has shut out have, sometimes grudgingly, embraced the sheer effectiveness of his organization, and his potential to create a lasting new Democratic majority. The open question is whether Obama's movement is about something more than the candidate, and whether it will cohere after he wins or loses in November.

"Will the Obama movement be a real movement that pushes its leader to keep his promises?" Micah Sifry wrote recently on the blog TechPresident. "Or will it be more of a personalized movement of followers attracted to a charismatic star?"

Obama's campaign has been remarkably effective so far this year at maintaining a coherent message, built around Obama's biography and his appeal for a new kind of politics. Part of his success has been tight message discipline: The campaign has been virtually leak-free, and the line of control from Obama to his chief strategist David Axelrod to campaign manager (and Axelrod business partner) David Plouffe is unchallenged.

Many involved in the independent efforts find it hard to quibble with that success, and may have second thoughts about continuing that work over Obama's explicit objection.

"If he were to make a definitive statement, we'd have to think hard about it," said one.

The campaign's opposition to the outside groups is, donors and activists said, being felt more sharply by the groups established to attack McCain through television advertising, as the lavishly funded Media Fund attacked Bush in 2004.

The chairman of Progressive Media USA, Brock, declined to comment on Obama's stance.

Martin Frost, the president of America Votes, also suggested that the Obama campaign stance had had more impact on media groups than on ones focused on turnout.

"We're continuing with our fundraising and things have been going well for us," he said. "You really need to ask someone who's dealing with the media aspect."

But Democrats who support the work of the media 527s say Obama's making a mistake. Progressive Media USA has aired anti-McCain television ads and developed a website intended to be a hub for negative information about McCain.

"Obama needs a baseline to the melody of his positive message," said a Democratic strategist who backs the group's aims.

I saw an article at the beginning of the month with the unsurprising news that John is heading up Sen. Obama's transition team. This morning's pieces in the Post reminded me of my earlier intent to ask you to pass along my willingness to help John out in any way he thinks I might be useful.

I trust that all is well. I'm planning on doing some phone banking and GOTV in Virginia as the election approaches. Fingers and toes crossed!

Thanks for passing this along All the best, RPR

Mike & Co. --

The government's current funding expires tonight at midnight so Congress will pass another short-term spending patch through December 22. Immediately thereafter, it will consider the sprawling, two thousand-page omnibus tax and spending package that leadership released at about 1:30 a.m this morning following weeks of negotiations on Capitol Hill.

Below is a look at some of more significant but less-noticed provisions the FY 2016 omnibus and more drill down on details of the tax extenders package.

Later today will likely see at long last the Fed's liftoff from its zero interest rate policy. Details to follow.

OMNIBUS

Here is the final disposition in the draft package of some significant provisions that have gone under the radar in the reporting:

- Campaign Finance -- Mitch McConnell pushed for language loosening federal restrictions on fundraising by political parties — a move meant to give parties more equal standing with independent “super PACs” that have the ability to raise unlimited amounts of money from private donors following the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision. But Democrats and conservative Republicans joined together to oppose any loosening of party fundraising, one of the key provisions of the 2002 McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform bill, and the provision was not included in the spending deal.

Included though was a GOP rider preventing the IRS from cracking down on the political activities of 501 (c)(4) nonprofit groups, who are allowed to spend on the “promotion of social welfare” with much less disclosure than a campaign or political action committee.

- Dodd-Frank -- Democrats rejected all riders that would repeal or scale back the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform bill. Republicans wanted to block a proposed Department of Labor regulation that requires retirement investment advisers not to consider how much commission or what fees could be collected when advising clients. That rider was not included in the deal, nor was a widely discussed proposal to reduce the number of banks subject to stricter financial regulations as “systemically important” institutions.

It does require OMB to submit a report to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate on the costs of implementing the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act and may ban the SEC from requiring disclosure of political spending

- First Responders -- Congress voted in 2010 to create a new federal health program for police officers, firefighters, construction workers and others who worked at Ground Zero in the immediate aftermath of 9/11 ; hundreds are suffering from cancer, respiratory illnesses and other maladies. The spending bill extends the health program until 2090 and adds another five years to a separate victims compensation fund, costing a total of $8 billion.

- Extension of Riders -- Nearly all of the policy riders included in the 2014 cromnibus were carried over in the 2015 spending bill. Among the most watched policy areas addressed last year and carried over into 2016:

- The bill still bans federal funding to perform most abortions and blocks the use of local and federal funding for abortions in the District of Columbia. Riders blocking the use of federal dollars for abortions for federal prisoners also remain in the bill.

- The White House will still be barred from transferring terrorism detainees to the United States from the U.S. military base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba

EXTENDERS

Below is a survey of how some of the major corporate and individual tax provisions fared in the extenders package (all did well; some did better than others):

Research & Development -- The bill includes Republican and corporate priorities such as making the research-and-development tax credit permanent for the first time since it was created in 1981 and expanding it so that some small companies that aren't making profits can take the credit against payroll taxes.

Small businesses would be able to write off as much as $500,000 in capital costs instead of the $25,000 they could deduct if Congress didn't act, and those levels would be indexed for inflation. Banks such as Citigroup Inc. and Morgan Stanley would get to continue deferring U.S. taxes on their foreign income.

Low-income Individual Breaks: Democrats, in turn, would win permanent extensions of some of President Obama's priorities—expanded tax credits for low-income and middle-class families that are scheduled to lapse at the end of 2017, after he has left office. The child-tax credit, earned-income tax credit and a college-tuition credit would all get extended indefinitely at their current levels, though without the indexing to inflation some Democrats had sought.

Cuts Made Permanent -- The following extenders would now graduate to permanent status:

- An expanded Earned Income Tax Credit for low-income earners;
- The Child Tax Credit for low and moderate income workers;
- The American Opportunity Tax Credit to help students under age 40 pay college tuition and expenses;
- Low income housing credits;
- An expanded research and experimentation credit;
- Section 179 business expensing, which allows businesses to fully deduct the price of equipment and software investments;
- State and local sales tax deduction;
- Tax deductions for food inventory donated to food banks;
- A deduction for land donated for conservation; and
- A tax break for individuals to donate to charity from qualified retirement accounts.

Five-Year Extensions -- Some are now five-year rather than annual extensions: Republicans won an extension of bonus depreciation, which lets all companies deduct more than usual in the year they buy a capital asset. Breaks for hiring people from disadvantaged groups and investing in struggling communities would be extended through 2019.

Democrats won five-year extensions of tax credits for wind and solar energy, including a change that lets solar projects qualify once they begin construction, instead of when they begin producing energy. Both the wind and solar credits would get phased out, though the details weren't available in the tax bill and would be included in the spending bill.

Next up, the Fed.

It is must-pass legislation par excellence. But the politics of the emerging "megabus" - the combined omnibus FY 2016 spending plan and the tax break extension package is paradoxical. Many in the GOP are reluctant to support the omnibus because it is the result of an earlier deal to increase spending over the next two years. House Democratic leaders, meanwhile, oppose the tax package because they argue it doesn't do enough for lower-income workers and would make it more difficult to strike a tax reform agreement in the future by making breaks for businesses appear less expensive than those for middle- and low-income taxpayers.
10/18/2016

Rep. Tim Huelskamp, a member of the hard-line House Freedom Caucus, has already predicted that most Republicans would not support the omnibus spending bill. So it will take Democratic votes to pass, which is also why it took five days to work out.

The product looks to be a thousand-page package of year-end legislation featuring:

- The FY 2016 Budget -- a $1.1 trillion omnibus spending measure with plenty of policy proposals
- The Tax Extenders Package -- a tax measure including about $750 billion in tax breaks for businesses and low-income individuals.

ACA/Cadillac Tax -- There is tentative agreement to alter major provisions of the Affordable Care Act, delaying a planned tax on high-cost health insurance plans

Medical Device Tax -- Under the tentative agreement, the device tax, which took effect in 2013, would be suspended in 2016 and 2017,

US Crude Export Ban -- It would lift the 40-year ban on crude oil exports from the United States. In exchange, Republicans agreed to extend a series of expired or expiring renewable energy tax breaks. Both the wind production tax credit and the solar investment tax credit won five-year extensions in the tax and spending packag

The Extenders -- The emerging agreement would permanently extend a popular business tax credit for research, one of many tax breaks that have been repeatedly renewed on a temporary basis. It would also continue a tax deduction for teachers who spend their own money for books, supplies and computer equipment used in the classroom, and a separate deduction for state and local sales taxes.

The deal would permanently extend several tax provisions and reauthorize dozens more retroactively for one year and then extend them through 2016, setting up another tax debate at the end of next year.

Zadroga Coda -- The bill would include the reauthorization and expansion of aid for emergency workers suffering from ailments related to the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York City to the tune of $4.6 billion for a victims compensation fund and an extension of health benefits through 2090, essentially making the program permanent.

Loose End Outstanding -- Democrats are still pressing for money for ocean conservation in exchange for agreement to lift the ban on crude oil exports.

Congressional negotiators appear near a bipartisan deal on a year-end spending and tax package tonight that would increase domestic and military funding, lift the ban on crude oil exports and extend several tax breaks for businesses and individuals.

The omnibus negotiations have been going on around the clock almost without pause since Friday but every passing hour makes it less likely that an agreement can be reached in time for the Wednesday midnight deadline Congress has given itself to enact a budget for FY 2016.

The difficulty of the omnibus talks may result in a more modest final package. The tax extenders piece may be severed from the omnibus, left to sink or swim on its own. And the length of the extensions themselves may be cut back in many cases from permanent to five years or from five to two years to broaden support.

Meanwhile, the markets are bracing themselves for the now universally expected increase in interest rates at the FOMC meetings this week. Closer to home, the date of adjournment on the Hill is still unknown 11 days before Christmas.

Below is a drill-down on the budget discussions, the main stumbling blocks, and the most likely outcomes.

Dana

You missed nothing if you heard nothing over weekend. So, to rehash the certainties at this point in the budget and tax discussions:

- Total discretionary spending under the budget ultimately released and adopted will cost $1.1 trillion -- the proposed spending figures are not in dispute.
- There are dozens of policy riders that lawmakers from both sides are working through.
- Talks are "notably fluid" and remarkably secretive -- nobody quite knows what the final product will look like or when it will be released.
- The Democrats appear ready to give in on lifting the crude oil export ban if Republicans respond with their own concessions.

If a deal cannot be reached and the Senate's procedural hurdles overcome before Wednesday's deadline -- even if the legislation is introduced as early as tomorrow -- it could force Congress to pass a second short-term funding extension. Speaker Ryan has pledged he'll abide by the GOP's three-day rule to give lawmakers enough time to read the massive bill. And if the bill isn't introduced until tomorrow, the House vote will be delayed to Thursday, forcing Congress to pass yet another short-term funding extension.

The holdup is the omnibus riders, which span a range of issues, from Wall Street reform and environmental policy to labor regulations and a Republican bill to halt the Syrian refugee program and to ensure tougher screenings.

The protracted omnibus negotiations have forced a decoupling of that bill from the similarly unfinished tax extenders package. Unifying the parallel discussions of the bills last week slowed progress on both of them.

It is now a parallel battle over a separate legislative package extending a long list of tax breaks for both businesses and families. After a series of short-term extensions, many in both parties want to make many of those permanent. But House Democrats say the package has grown unwieldy and tilts too heavily in favor of corporations at the expense of individuals and federal revenues.

This despite the fact there is general agreement on the basics of the tax bill. Parts of the Earned Income Tax Credit, Child Tax Credit and American Opportunity Tax Credit that are set to expire at the end of 2017 would be permanently extended. So would a popular credit for corporate research programs, expanded investment write-offs for small businesses and a deduction for state and local sales taxes, along with some other smaller provisions. The rest of the 50-odd extenders would be revived for either two or five years, though which tax breaks would get a shorter or longer life is still to be determined.

The Democrats' push to index the child tax credit to inflation, at a cost of more than $70 billion, had been turned away by the GOP leadership.

And the Democrats appear ready to accept a major policy change by allowing an end to the current ban on crude oil exports, long sought by the petroleum industry and the GOP. The language lifting the 40-year ban on crude oil exports could still end up either in the omnibus or the extender package. But the Democrats' compromise won't come without concessions, still to be determined. Some Democrats want extensions of renewable energy tax breaks in exchange for loosening a ban on oil exports.

Sen. Durbin said Thursday he thought it would be reasonable to expand the renewable credits or scale back breaks that oil producers get already if the export ban is lifted. "There is strong feeling that something that's worth up to $200 billion to the oil industry ought to be of some value to the rest of America too."

Those leading the talks have appeared relaxed as they head to the finish line. Ryan and his kids, for instance, were spotted at Lambeau Field on Sunday for the Green Bay Packers-Dallas game.

The annual session-end crunch is on in Congress, with several big-ticket items under negotiation. As predictable as this yearly jam is, the outcomes are not at this stage. Congress is searching for just the right mix of provisions and bills until a permutation that can guarantee passage is found. Until then, the negotiators continue to try combinations of the puzzle pieces.

To appreciate how few people have a grip on the current state of the overall negotiations at any given time, Sen. Klobuchar tracked down an out-of-breath Chuck Schumer at the Senate gym to get an update to report to a DSCC breakfast today.

The most important pieces are the 40-plus omnibus riders -- substantive policy provisions, as opposed to appropriation amounts -- and the 50-plus extenders currently in play. Given the interest expressed in the key riders on the block, I itemize those below and give a snapshot of where the discussions stand.

NB: the negotiations will not include Senate Banking Chair Shelby's comprehensive financial regulatory bill. He has not put up the white flag, but members and staffers are all saying that Shelby 2.0 is dead both as a standalone and as an omnibus rider.

FY 2016 negotiations are continuing into the night tonight and only one thing is certain. We will certainly see a CR passed and signed tomorrow, giving negotiators until next Wednesday the 16th -- otherwise the government shuts at midnight Friday. It is possible, though unlikely, that we will see a draft omnibus or extenders package, or both. Either way, it will be a working weekend for the negotiators.

When Congress is under pressure to pass several big-ticket items in a short period of time, it tries to determine if it can buy more time. Speaker Ryan made it clear -- no adjournment until a full-year FY 2016 budget deal is done, no CR extending tables into January, as some in the House Freedom Caucus had been seeking. No shutdown. Senate Majority Leader McConnell has long held this position.

With as little time as Congress has to pass a budget, the negotiators start by identifying the non-starter provisions on the table. These are "ideological" or "poison pill" omnibus riders. An example would be anything the president has promised to veto. None of the tax extenders are seen as non-negotiable.

So the negotiators -- Congressional leadership, the Chairs of key committees such as appropriations, staff, and members of the administration -- then buy off the non-negotiable items from their advocates with acceptable alternatives until the none of the bill's provisions would deprive it of a majority.

The important remaining provisions are then paired off -- with D and R provisions matched on the basis or priority to the proponents and votes it might sway if included in final passage.

So which are the biggest pieces still on the board right now and where do they stand on it?

Democratic priorities:

- Expanding EITC and the Child Tax Credit
- Adding new college tax credit
- Extending 9/11 first responder health benefits

Republican priorities:

- Blocking the DOL Fiduciary Rule
- Defunding sanctuary cities
- Overturning President Obama's immigration executive orders
- Overturning EPA greenhouse emissions regulations
- Regulating inland waterways
- Easing campaign finance restrictions (pushed by McConnell)

Other key items still in the mix:

- Lifting the ban on U.S. oil exports
- Reforming Visa waiver policy

Off the table:

- Defunding Planned Parenthood
- Shelby 2.0, per the above
- Indexation of the Child Tax Credit
- Blocking refugee resettlement from Syria or Iraq
- a very long-shot attempt to move an online sales tax compromise

The Democrats have a tacit advantage in the negotiations. Almost everyone believes that a shutdown would be particularly costly to the GOP, so the Republicans need to keep their Democratic counterparts at the table.

Furthermore, Speaker Ryan may need a substantial number of Democratic votes to get a budget passed in the House. The budget on which the bill will be modeled passed, 178 Democrats supporting it, with only 79 GOP votes.

The extenders package, which is much simpler and smaller than the omnibus (at most $700 billion over ten years vs. $1.1 trillion to be spent before September 30 ), might well be completed before the omnibus and therefore could be combined with it.

Stay tuned.

Most of the activity on Capital Hill this week is focused on the FY 2016 budget, but it has become so rider-ridden that few expect it to be completed by the Friday deadline for passage. Instead it is becoming likely that Congress will adopt a short-term continuing resolution that will push votes on (some number of) riders and final passage into next week.

Meanwhile, Congress leaders are quietly putting the finishing touches on a customs enforcement measure, a key part of Obama's trade agenda. They're aiming to finish the measure this week and send it over to the White House, but top Democrats aren't sold yet.

Sander Levin, Ways and Means' ranking member, said he isn't "optimistic that this committee will report the measure which reauthorizes the U.S. Customs and Border Protection agency, streamlines trade rules that aim to keep importers from skirting U.S. antidumping and countervailing duties, adds new protections for intellectual property rights and provides more tools to identify and address currency manipulation.

The impetus behind the bill, per top Senate Finance Committee Democrat Sen. Ron Wyden: "Too often, companies sneak counterfeit goods past our borders. Foreign governments spy on our businesses and enforcers. They bully our firms into relocating jobs and turning over intellectual property."

Back tomorrow with the state of play on the FY 2016 budget and the riders under consideration.

Senior Senate Finance and House Ways and Means staff were at the negotiating table much of this weekend, working on a growing tax extenders-plus package now rumored to cost in the $700-800 billion over ten-year ballpark. The package began with the Senate Finance bill reported in July extending or making permanent the 50-odd tax breaks known as collectively as the "extenders." Late in the fall, once the GOP accepted the expansions to the EITC and child tax credit (CTC) included in the 2012 year-end fiscal cliff bill but due to expire in 2018, and credit for four-year college costs -- pushed by Senate Democrats and the administration -- and other key items were added, lending the package increasing legislative momentum.

The bill now also delays implementation of the "Cadillac" plan tax in the ACA from 2018 to 2020.

Before these trimmings, the extenders package had languished on the Senate sidelines for months. But the above inducements, combined with a tacit agreement that the package had grown beyond the constraints of PAYGO, mean it could end up being biggest tax deal since the Bush tax cuts were capped in 2012.

The GOP appears to have signed off on a deal for the EITC and the CTC expansions. These can be made permanent, but "improper payments" to fraudulent claimants must be addressed. without addressing ways to reduce problems with the payments. Finance and Ways and Means staffers are working on an integrity proposal short of requiring a Social Security Number or an in-person Taxpayer Identification Number. And Democrats may yet give on a GOP tax priority of longstanding -- a delay for a 2.3 percent tax on medical device manufacturers. Also still on the block: indexing the CTC for inflation and, if PAYGO is applied, a provision closing the carried interest loophole.

The emerging package is taking so long to because it is not an just an across the board effort to extend or make permanent all of the 52 tax breaks. The latest versions have the bonus depreciation phasing out over the next four years, 2016-2019, and the Subpart F exemption for active financing and CFC look-through is extended for two years through 2016. The wind production tax credit may be phased out in 2019 starting next year. The solar credit's fate has yet to be determined, but it's on life support.

But such an extender bill is not yet a done deal. Some poison pill items are in the mix. Some Republicans want to bar undocumented immigrants from receiving refundable credits—a non-starter for Democrats. Unions and most Republicans want to repeal the Cadillac Tax on high-cost employer sponsored health plans and other lawmakers want to dump the ACA tax on medical devices. The White House may choke on some of those provisions.

Other than that, the only obstacle to the bill may be its own size. The eye-popping numbers are raising the ire of Democrats who spent much of this year debating mandatory spending cuts to offset the cost of raising the spending caps set by the 2011 Budget Control Act.

Sen. McCaskill: "I'm going to have trouble supporting any extenders package. I think it's too big and there are way to many goodies being given out to special interests. How are we ever going to get tax reform if we keep giving out goodies at Christmas?" Sen. Carper: "We're running a $400 billion budget deficit that's expected to rise in the next half dozen years back to a trillion dollars. When we're talking about an extenders tax package that is not paid for, small is better." A Pelosi aide said Friday, "The initial package is too big in the leader's view."

Drilling down on the points of contention to be resolved before a deal can be announced:

The Cadillac tax -- Both parties are interested in including language to repeal or delay of ObamaCare's "Cadillac" tax on high-cost insurance plans in the extenders package. The Senate on Thursday passed an amendment to repeal the tax by a vote of 90-10. But the amendment was included in a bill that will be vetoed because it would repeal ObamaCare. The administration supports the Cadillac tax, which is currently slated to take effect in 2018, because it raises revenue and is an incentive to lower healthcare costs. The Congressional Budget Office estimated that a repeal of the Cadillac tax would cost about $93 billion in lost revenue.

EITC -- Speaker Ryan and President Obama have propose to change the EITC provision in almost exactly the same way. They would phase in the credit more quickly as a worker's earnings rise, raise the maximum credit to about $1,000, and lower the eligibility age from 25 to 21. These changes would make a big difference. Currently, a childless worker with poverty-level wages receives an EITC of $172, not nearly enough to offset the $1,188 he or she owes in income tax and the employee share of payroll taxes. The Ryan/Obama proposals would give that worker an $841 EITC, a major step towards lifting the worker back to the poverty line.

Energy: The deal could extend the Wind Production Tax Credit and the Solar Investment Tax Credit for five years with a phase out. But the GOP wants to let the credits phase out as scheduled. The wind credit expired at the end of 2014, and the solar credit is set to expire in 2016. There is also some interest in using the tax extenders package as the vehicle for lifting the ban on crude oil exports. Some lawmakers want to an end to the ban included in the bill in exchange for extending the renewable energy credits. Kevin Brady, Ways and Means Chair, said that Congress is looking at several possible vehicles for achieving that and said he favors lifting the ban.

The price tag -- The sheer size of the deal, which could cost upwards of $700 to $800 billion over a decade, is a major a concern to fiscal hawks. These are dollar figures reminiscent of the stimulus. If it is tarred as such, it could lose moderates like McCaskill and Carper. Even Elizabeth Warren has taken issue with the fact that the bill wouldn't be paid for. But the prevailing reasoning follows these lines. Rep. Charles Boustany, Chair of the House Ways and Means Committee's tax-policy subcommittee: "We're not going to raise taxes now at this point to give tax breaks in other areas." Kevin Brady: "We shouldn't have to pay for returning people's hard-earned money to them. People are just pulling these numbers out of the air. I'm convinced if there's a package, it will be much more focused than what we're seeing floating around."

Length of Extension: The deal under consideration would make some expired breaks permanent, extend some for five years, and extend the rest for two years. Exactly which provisions end up in which bucket appears to be somewhat settled but may not be completely final. Aside from the tax credits benefiting families, the list of provisions that would be cemented include many of the business and other tax breaks that the House and the Ways and Means Committee voted to make permanent earlier this year.

FWIW, reported from Shelby last night re talks with Tester on Shelby 2.0: "We've been talking even tonight -- we're trying to see if we can work out some things with the Democrats. Haven't been able to yet but still talking back and forth, specifics."

If you were among those who wanted to know more about the "big parts" that Senate Banking's Ranking Member Sherrod Brown meant he had successfully advocated for in the transportation bill now headed for the president's desk, the Senator's inventory of provisions and lightly edited

Export-Import Bank Renewal

"The Export-Import Bank is one of the best tools we have to help businesses of all sizes in Ohio and across our country grow, create jobs, and compete in the global economy. Renewing the Ex-Im Bank will ensure that American businesses aren't put at a disadvantage to our foreign competitors."

Buy America Provisions

Brown pushed for a provision that would increase the amount of American-made steel and other components that will go into buses and subway cars. The bill requires transit rolling stock (buses and rail cars) to include 70 percent domestic content, such as steel, by 2020, up from 60 percent under current law.

Regulatory Relief for Community Banks and Credit Unions

The transportation bill "provides the kind of targeted relief for community banks and credit unions that Democrats and Republicans agree is long overdue. It will help America's smallest financial institutions be more efficient, cut some of their administrative costs, and still protect consumers."

Key provisions:

- Boosting the number of small banks that could be eligible for Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation examinations on an 18-month cycle, instead of an annual cycle.
- Eliminating the requirement that financial institutions send annual privacy notices to their customers, if their privacy policy hasn't changed.
- Allowing privately insured credit unions to be eligible for membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank (FHLB) system and receive FHLB funding.

The holiday season ends December 16, apparently. On that day, almost all now agree, the seven-year national zero-interest rate season will end. It is as baked in as the sun in the morning -- barring calamity in the November jobs report, of course.

All year long Senate Banking Chair Shelby has insisted his Dodd-Frank deregulation bill is just community bank relief and a few stocking stuffers. Now that we are in the stretch run to Christmas, is anyone buying it? More below.

If four moderate Senate Banking Democrats meet repeatedly to discuss which provisions in the Chair's bill they can sign onto and pass but neither the Chair nor the Ranking Member is involved in the discussions, does the bill exist and if so, will it pass?

Answer: yes and no. In a sleight of hand move, veteran Banking Chair Shelby has steered his bill away from his Committee, which can only reach the floor from there if it is modified. He's also senior on Approps. and that's where it's hiding. In July, Shelby succeeded in attaching his original bill to an appropriations proposal approved in a partisan committee vote.

Though the current discussions are happening as Congress gears up to pass legislation before December 11 that would fund the government and avert a shutdown, Democratic leaders have steadfastly opposed policy riders in spending measures, particularly if they walk back regulations in the 2010 Dodd-Frank regulatory law.

House and Senate Republicans first proposed enabling regulators including the FSOC to pick which regional banks would be subject to the so-called enhanced prudential standards, replacing a fixed $50 billion asset trigger in place today. Senate Banking Democrats have pushed back on including FSOC in the process, and some appear more amenable to raising the threshold to a higher number, according to sources following the issue, who said $250 billion is a possibility.

"The best I can say right now is that all of that is in play," Sen. Crapo said yesterday. He confirmed discussion of a tiering approach -- giving regional banks below $500 billion an opportunity to escape the tougher rules.

Fed Chair Janet Yellen told a House panel last month she would only support a "very modest increase" in the $50 billion asset trigger. Treasury Secretary Jack Lew has said "even $150 billion, $200 billion institutions are large" and that "we have to be careful not to get into a conversation where we start rolling back some of the core protections that have made our system safer and sounder."

Sen. Tester was central in the group of Committee Democrats and occasional Republicans who kept talks going after a partisan vote on Shelby's original proposal in May. But said he was not pushing for changes to the way the FSOC designates nonbanks as "systemically important," as proposed by Shelby in his bill.

Where do things stand today?

Tester: "The deal is far from complete. At this point in time, I don't know that it's going to happen."

Sen. Donnelly, another member of the group: "I remain optimistic, but it is clear to me that this package is not ready for inclusion in the omnibus spending bill."

Ranking Member Sherrod Brown: Democrats are "not negotiating any of the stuff Shelby really wants."

Shelby has tried to include his bill in an upcoming government funding agreement, but Brown knows the battle has moved forums. Still, he says he is "confident" that Senate Appropriations ranking member Barbara Mikulski will "hold the line on Wall Street overreach."

In fact, Brown implied he'd outfoxed the Chair, saying "big parts" of what he was advocating for in a package to help community banks in May was tucked in a transportation bill headed for the president's desk in the coming days.

Below, a closer look at some of the many distinctive features of the Highway Trust Fund reauthorization that is likely to be voted on in the House today and the Senate next week, focusing on the offset provisions. Also note the coda on the Zadroga saga.

Section by Section Summary: http://transportation.house.gov/uploadedfiles/joint\_explanatory\_statement.pdf

CBO Score: https://www.cbo.gov/sites/default/files/114th-congress-2015-2016/costestimate/hr22\_1.pdf

The House will vote later today on a $253 billion, five-year reauthorization of the Highway Trust Fund, which expires tomorrow. The bill provides $205 billion in highway spending and $48 billion in transit projects over the next five years and is the first long-term highway bill in ten years. The bill also reopens the shuttered Export-Import Bank until 2019.

The Senate is expected to follow suit quickly. Said the White House: "We would actually view this legislation as a step in the right direction, but only a first step because we believe that there are more infrastructure projects that are worthy of funding that would create jobs in the short-term and lay a long-term foundation for our ongoing economic strength over the long-term." Obama proposed a six-year, \$478 billion highway bill earlier this year.

The Fixing America's Surface Transportation Act, or the FAST Act formally reauthorizes the collection of the unindexed 18.4 cents per gallon gas tax that is used to pay for transportation projects and includes $70 billion in pay-fors to close a $16 billion deficit in annual transportation funding that has developed as U.S. cars have become more fuel-efficient.

The federal government typically spends about $50 billion per year on transportation projects; the gas tax only brings in $34 billion annually. Spending from the Fund has outpaced dwindling gas tax receipts for several years, resulting in the average annual shortfall of about $16 billion. Congress has been struggling for years to come up with ways to pay for a long-term transportation funding extension without raising taxes

In a surprise, the Fed gets dinged for a chunk of the rest of the check this time. The two biggest offsets: 1) capping the Fed's surplus account at $10 billion and sweep the rest to Treasury, and; 2) reducing the dividend rate for capital that banks with more than $10 billion of assets in the Federal Reserve system.

Several conferees said they begrudgingly swallowed many of the pay-fors, including a plan to dig into the Federal Reserve's pockets and a separate idea to funnel revenue from a customs fee levied on airline and cruise passengers to the Fund. House Ways and Means Chair Kevin Brady said he opposed using revenue from the customs fees but ultimately signed off the conference report.

The offsets also include changes to passport rules for applicants delinquent on taxes. Other mechanisms include contracting out some tax collection services to private companies — over the objection of unions that represent federal IRS workers. These and the other major offsets are detailed below.

- FRB Dividend -- effective January 1, the dividend paid to big banks will drop from 6 percent to the latest high yield on 10-year Treasuries (currently around 2.15 percent, higher than the originally proposed 1.5 percent ), but no higher than 6 . That is, banks would retain the lesser percent of the 6 percent and the 10-year Treasury rate. Banks with assets under $10 billion would be exempted from the rate cut; the $10 billion cutoff would be indexed to inflation.

Fed Chair Janet Yellen opposed the provision but not vociferously and the House in its own bill had replaced the provision with a permanent liquidation of a surplus fund the Fed keeps as a cushion against losses.

The conferees did agree to shield banks with less than $10 billion in assets from the dividend reduction. Banks above the asset threshold would likely receive a smaller dividend linked to the yield of a 10-year Treasury note.

Originally adopted in the Senate as a cut in the dividend to 1.5 percent this summer but removed by the House, it is back in this modified version in the final deal. But the Treasury yield is rarely below 2 percent and could rise when the Fed raises interest rates so losses to banks will be marginal compared to the 6 to 1.5 percent cut first floated in July.

- Rainy Day Fund -- A trim off a reserve fund held by the Fed capping the Fed's surplus account at $10 billion and transferring the rest to the Treasury to finance the Fund. Conferees agreed to let the central bank keep up to $10 billion in its surplus fund and send the rest to the Treasury. That fund today is around $29 billion. The Fed has argued that the budget maneuver threatens its independence. Congress has tapped the Fund in the past but not to this extent.
- SPR Sales -- Sale of 66 million barrels of crude oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and tax compliance measures. Sales of 16 million in FY23, 25 mil in FY24, and 25 mil. in FY25.
- GSE Fees -- Extension of GSE guarantee fees from October 1, 2021 to October 1, 2025.
- Automatic Extension -- Repeal of the 3½ month automatic extension for filing returns of employee benefit plans, Form 5500.
- Debt Collection -- Authorization for the IRS to hire private debt collectors and to revoke passports of those with more than $50,000 of seriously delinquent debt. Efforts to use private collection agencies to collect federal taxes were scuttled twice in the past 20 years -- both times revenue fell.
- Indexation -- Inflation adjustment of certain customs fees.

With this latest bill, Congress once again looks the other way on the issue, meaning lawmakers will be back to square one on the funding shortfall in just a few years. The conference expanded a suite of regulatory changes that went beyond some that the House passed in its draft of the highway bill. The changes target a range of issues from a key CFPB rule to legal barriers getting in the way of derivatives reporting.

It would extend legal protections to lenders on mortgages with ballooning payments made in rural or underserved areas even if the lender does not predominately operate there. This would expand the amount of loans that would be considered "qualified mortgages" and thus meet the CFPB's ability-to-repay requirements that went into effect last year. The bill would also force the CFPB to accept petition requests to designate certain areas as rural or underserved that the bureau hasn't designated already -- one of the community banking sector's top priorities.

By the way, there is a coda on the Zadroga bill here. Sen. Boxer, confirming that the Zadroga provisions for 9/11 first responders were ultimately not included called it "really a big disappointment that that didn't get added at the end. I think we should have done it, but you know what? It's a negotiation. I didn't get everything I wanted."

All but three Democratic conferees signed the report. Sen. Schumer didn't because the Zadroga bill was left out. Sens. Sherrod Brown and Ron Wyden didn't agree to the deal either for unrelated reasons.

Hi again -- hope everyone got a little downtime and home time during the Thanksgiving break.

Congress is back in now for the home stretch to year-end adjournment, for which no target date has been set. The first deadline it faces is passing a long-term infrastructure bill after approving yet another short-term funding patch before leaving for Thanksgiving. That patch expires this Friday, December 4.

Signs are good that conferees will approve a three-year package -- that would make it the first transportation funding legislation to pass that lasts longer than two years since 2005. Ex-Im reauthorization is still in the mix. More on this in the coming days.

Signs are indicating less certainty regarding the outcome yet of the negotiators on staff who worked nearly round the clock in a basement conference room over break on the FY 2016 budget. The reason rests with the many riders already attached -- Shelby 2.0, in toto, among them -- and others under consideration. A brief overview of the GOP's highest priority and the most policy-significant riders currently under discussion follows.

The budget deal that was John Boehner's swan song last month increased the overall discretionary spending level by $33 billion for fiscal 2016. But it did not specify how that money should be spent or what additional policy riders might be included in a year-end omnibus spending bill needed by December 11 to keep the government open.

Looming over the negotiations is memory -- rueful to Dodd-Frank advocates -- of last year's iteration of this process when Congress approved the last-minute provision requiring the riskier derivatives trades made by bank holding companies to be conducted outside the units that hold deposits and enjoy the benefits of deposit insurance.

The focus this year:

CFPB -- Chief among the perennial riders geared toward hemming in the CFPB are ones to put the bureau under a five-member commission chosen by party leaders, instead of a single director; block the CFPB's efforts to combat discriminatory auto loans; and curtail the use of forced-arbitration clauses with class-action bans. This year, Democrats are likely to remain united and successful in opposition to other areas of the law that Republicans want to change, in particular the CFPB.

Community Banks/SIFIs -- Republicans are expected to focus on aspects of it that moderate Democrats have said they are open to changing, such as easing rules for community banks. There may well also be sufficient bipartisan support for raising the SIFI threshold at which institutions face a more stringent set of Federal Reserve regulations because of their size. This increased scrutiny now applies to banks with $50 billion or more in assets. The Shelby 2.0 cutoff is $500 billion.

Fiduciary Rule -- Another high priority rider for the financial community: preventing or delaying new conflict-of-interest provisions for investment advisers who manage retirement funds.

EITC & CTC/Tax Extenders -- Negotiators are also working on a bipartisan compromise to make a series of provisions in Obama's original stimulus program permanent that expire in 2017. These have expanded the earned-income tax credit that helps Americans with low incomes and created a child tax credit that has the same effect. In exchange for locking in these credits, Democrats would agree to make permanent the research and development tax credit and other business tax breaks that Congress typically extends anyway.

Campaign Finance -- Mitch McConnell has a pet rider, a provision being discussed that would eliminate caps on the amount of cash that parties may spend in coordination with their candidates.

Non-Profits -- Another GOP-backed effort seeks to block the IRS and the SEC from enacting additional regulations and disclosure requirements on politically active nonprofit groups.

Per Kevin McCarthy today, no votes on riders relating to Planned Parenthood funding. But what about the myriad others -- on my clean air standards, accepting Syrian refugees or a perennial issue such as health care -- any of which would instantly invite a veto and send us back to square one.

The terms of engagement for year-end changes to Dodd-Frank are being gamed out in various quarters around the Hill, with the CR's December 11 expiration now less than a month away. Last year, the spending bill came at a price -- and that was before the GOP took the Senate.

For the first time since its passage in 2010, a significant amendment to Dodd-Frank (DFA) was enacted last year when the Section 716 swaps "push-out" provision was repealed. It was accomplished in an 11th-hour deal to get the must-pass "Cromnibus" over the finish line at year end. The deal enraged Sen. Warren and 21 of 54 Democrats voted against the bill even though its approval came less than three hours before a midnight deadline that threatened a federal shutdown.

And gone was the requirement that some derivatives trades made by bank holding companies be conducted outside the units that hold deposits and enjoy the benefits of deposit insurance.

Within weeks, Warren torpedoed an administration nomination to a key Treasury post overseeing Dodd-Frank. Though the nominee's views were not dissimilar from Warren's, he had spent the bulk of his years at Lazard, a blue chip Wall Street firm (and, possibly worse, French). No one has been nominated to the post since.

House Financial Services has reported bills weakening, limiting, underfunding, or repealing various parts of DFA frequently this session, passing ten more similar measures in a marathon mark-up last week. But none of these has a chance of being picked up in the Senate, let alone of enactment on a standalone basis while Obama is President.

In the Senate, the most comprehensive set of legislative limits to DFA yet to clear a major Committee, written by Senate Banking Chair Richard Shelby, cleared the panel on a 12-10 party-line vote in May. The bill has eight major titles and provisions ranging from increasing the SIFI designation threshold to changing the method of selecting the NY Fed President to requiring exams for community banks every 18 months instead of annually. Have a look: http://www.banking.senate.gov/public/\_cache/files/73d86467-03c5-4e11-9aa2-e205ec1cf811/3895FC44565256E3151D809B2A429B8A.section-by-section-summary.pdf.

A party line 12-10 vote in committee isn't enough to get such a sweeping bill to the floor and Shelby knows it. Reformers and industry have both taken a close interest in the congressional struggle to refund the government with eyes on December 11. The appropriations rider strategy has worked before. Shelby has now publicly stated that the appropriations process, with the implied threat of a government shutdown, offers the "best shot" of getting it enacted. Riders under discussion cover a range of issues including the Fiduciary Rule, the legal basis for nonprofit groups to challenge discriminatory housing and mortgage-lending practices, and CFPB governance.

Seeking to put a tag on the price Democrats paid in last year's CR sweepstakes, Sen. Warren and Rep. Elijah Cummings of Maryland, ranking Democrat on the House Overnight and Government Reform Committee published a letter this week from FDIC estimating that the 15 banks currently registered as swap dealers along with their subsidiaries hold up to $9.7 trillion of the types of derivatives that would have been pushed out under Section 716 (totaling 4.4 percent of all outstanding derivatives contract holdings at federally insured banks, comprised of $6.1 trillion in credit derivatives, $1 trillion in commodity derivatives and $2.6 trillion in equities derivatives, per the FDIC letter).

But in the quieter corners of the Capitol, with GOP majorities in both ends, a group of moderate Democrats is negotiating with Republicans, risking the wrath of Warren and maybe the Democratic base. The group includes Sens. Donnelly, and Heitkamp, coordinated by Tester, occasionally Warner. Donnelly said work is happening "every day." Sherrod Brown: "everybody's talking to everybody."

Shelby is trying to find the price that the CR can bear, in terms of heft and scope of viable changes to Dodd-Frank.

Sen. Moran: "That's been the discussion really from the beginning: How expansive can this be, and beyond community banks what more can be accomplished? The parameters have been narrowed, but, still, finding that sweet spot is in discussion."

Treasury Secretary Lew on Tuesday: "We are open to discussions about things that are truly technical but we are very much opposed to anything that would undermine any of the core architecture of Dodd-Frank. The line between the two is sometimes hard to define."

If it is only regulatory relief for community banks, it's like a win-win, most Democrats would agree. If it's a tenfold increase in the SIFI trigger, harder to say. If it's closer to the scope and scale of Shelby's bill, a stormy December is in the forecast.

Subject: compassionate?

Dear John,

What makes Paul Ryan and Nan Hayworth different from Mitt Romney?

All three are millionaires who want to end Medicare to give themselves another huge tax break -- and they all want seniors to pay another $6,400 a year to cover the bill.

But only Hayworth and Ryan have actually voted to do it. Twice.

And while all three are completely out of touch with everyday folks, only Hayworth has actually said that ending Medicare to pay for her own tax cut was "compassionate."

That's right. Compassionate.

I'm running for this seat because I'm tired of Nan Hayworth and Paul Ryan putting themselves and their Tea Party priorities first. It's time to put them out, but I'm going to need your help. Grassroots donors like you chipping in whatever you can is the only way to fight back against these Tea Party millionaires.

Ryan and Hayworth want seniors to pay another $6,400 a year. Give \$6.40 or more to my campaign right now and help me keep that from happening.

Hayworth's Tea Party votes have earned her over a million dollars from corporate PACs and lobbyists. I'll never have their backing. But with your help today, I won't need it.

Click here to give right away.

Thank you for your incredible support -- together, we can get this done.

Subject: Delegate Selection

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am writing you to inform you that I have completed the required paperwork to be a delegate for Secretary Clinton. As you know delegates will be selected by the campaign and diversity will be a factor.

I am an African American male and a Muslim. I am hopeful that Both my ethnic group and religious group will play a vital role in the campaign's success .

As president of the American Muslim Chamber of Commerce, I am looking forward to having the organization make a public endorsement of Secretary Clinton.

I am a registered voter in Pennsylvania.

Kindest regards,

Subject: Script

Shorter script that's still similar enough that she'll recognize it:

Hello. I thought you might find it useful to have some answers to share with your friends if they ask about all these news stories out there about my email habits when I was Secretary of State. So I want to take some time to try and explain it to you directly, in one place, at one time, as best as I can.

Please bear with me because parts are confusing, and like many of you, I don't understand all of the technological aspects. [But when you hear all the facts, I think you'll agree that all the political noise over this issue is just that – political noise.]

In 2007, when I was a U.S. Senator, I got my first Blackberry. I used it to keep up with the news, with friends & family - and yes, I also got my fair share of unsolicited forwards that sometimes made me laugh and sometimes made me want to throw it away. In short, I used email like most people.

Fast forward to 2009. One of my husband's staff members bought the domain name clintonemail.com so his team could switch from the various email providers they were relying on to one consolidated system. I joined them.

This was all before I started my new job as Secretary of State. Had President Obama not asked me to join his team, if I had stayed in the U.S. Senate, I still would have switched to this new email.

And when I did get to State, it seemed simpler to have just the one address. After all, my predecessors at State had not relied on Department email. In hindsight, though, this has proven anything but simple.

That's the explanation - but it's no excuse. There's a difference between allowed to do and smart to do. I shouldn't have done it this way. I should have set the standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But I can't do it all again. I can only tell you it was a mistake, regret it, explain it, and help State and others fix any challenges it caused.

That's what I did. Now I want to explain what I didn't do.

I didn't keep my email secret. Whenever I emailed, it was from my address. Whenever people emailed me, it was to my account. Work, personal, whatever. And yes, I continued to get my fair share of unsolicited forwards.

I also didn't do this to skirt rules. And I didn't do it to avoid having my records preserved. When State asked former Secretaries of State who served in the era of electronic communications to help fill out the archival record, I did so, printing 55,000 pages of email including anything related to my work at the State Department. To get a sense of how outdated some of the government's archiving practices are, we had to print all 55,000 pages because that's what the rules demand. Believe me, printing more than 30,000 email instead of handing them over electronically isn't something anyone does by choice.

That's 30,000 more emails than every other former Secretary produced combined .

And yes, there were 30,000 more messages that were completely personal and had nothing to do with official business.

I do believe transparency in government is important. And by this point, there isn't much you don't know about me. My finances are out there. My medical history is out there. You know how much I've made, where I've gone, what I'm allergic to.

But what wasn't work wasn't the government's business. So I didn't keep those emails. I didn't print them. I knew no matter what I decided to do with them, I was in for criticism. So I chose to keep a modicum of privacy. I hope you can understand that.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. More than once when a tent was set up in some far-away hotel, I was told to read the classified material with the blanket over my head. No, that's not a joke. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously. So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we're all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn't. What's not fine is to criticize people – especially career officials who have devoted their lives to serving our country -- for handling what they didn't know might be deemed classified years later by another part of the government. That's an impossible standard to meet. Members of Congress and their staff also handled some of these messages. Some articles being written about this issue today contain classified information. Should someone sending that article to a colleague be told in 2020 that they broke the rules? I hope not.

As for the security of my email, in more than a little bit of irony, every day we learn of a new hack by the Chinese, by the Russians. That millions of Americans' personal information has been stolen.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

I wish that a video was enough to address this. I know it isn't though. But I wanted to try to put everything in one place.

Along those lines, after nearly a year of offering to come up at any time anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

I'm sure this issue will come up. It's unclear to me how it will help us understand what happened in Benghazi or how to help prevent future tragedies - but I'm going to do my best to answer whatever they ask.

And while I can't predict the future, let me finish by taking a stab:

- There will be many more email to pour through.
- Some will be serious, some will be embarrassing.
- You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)
- There will be more dramatic leaks and assertions that prove to be untrue.

But at some point, you're going to have them all. And if you suffer through all 55,000 pages, you'll be able to judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

If you've made it this far, thank you for watching.

The first batch of emails from Hillary Clinton's four years running the State Department was released Friday.

Even before the emails were made public, the State Department argued that the nearly 900 pages of documents do not fundamentally alter the findings of the State Department's Accountability Review Board that probed the Benghazi terrorist attacks.

"The emails we release today do not change the essential facts or our understanding of the events before, during, or after the attacks, which have been known since the independent Accountability Review Board report on the Benghazi attacks was released almost two and a half years ago," wrote the department's deputy spokeswoman Marie Harf.

These highly anticipated emails, some of which have already leaked out, give insight into Clinton's tenure as the top U.S. diplomat. They're also serving as fodder for critics of the Democratic presidential front-runner, who is still dogged by questions about a 2012 terrorist attack in Benghazi that killed Ambassador Chris Stevens.

And they are sure to raise more questions about the administration's and Clinton's response to what quickly became a political scandal. There is an email dated Sept. 15 with Clinton providing "talking points" for an upcoming closed-door hearing before the House Select Committee on Intelligence, but with the exception of Jake Sullivan the recipients are blacked out, along with the entire document.

It states only: "Per the discussion at Deputies, here are the revised TPs for HPSCI."

The emails also show that Clinton received now-classified documents on her personal email address. One of the documents State recently deemed classified was a November 2012 email reporting possible arrests in Libya related to the Benghazi attack. The memo was sent through unclassified State Department channels and forwarded to Clinton's private account by Sullivan, State's Director of Policy Planning. A notation on the document released says it was classified as "SECRET"—the middle tier of national security classification—on Friday, the same day the records were released.

Clinton has been under intense pressure for weeks since it was revealed that she used a non-official email address while at the State Department and stored those emails on a personal server in her New York home. Republicans jumped on those revelations to accuse Clinton of attempting to run around federal records laws and keep key documents about Libya and Benghazi from the public.

Republican Rep. Trey Gowdy, chairman of the House Select Committee on Benghazi, has subpoenaed the State Department for all documents on Libya from Clinton's time at the State Department and is refusing to schedule the former secretary to testify until the Obama administration turns the emails over to congressional investigators.

Insiders: Benghazi testimony works to Hillary's advantage

KATIE GLUECK

Gowdy said in a statement Friday that the committee will continue to seek all documents from Clinton's tenure at the State Department on Libya and Benghazi and not the "self-selected" emails the former secretary made available.

"To assume a self-selected public record is complete, when no one with a duty or responsibility to the public had the ability to take part in the selection, requires a leap in logic no impartial reviewer should be required to make and strains credibility," Gowdy said.

The Benghazi Committee has had access to this first batch of email, which represents less than 2 percent of the 55,000 emails Clinton returned to State, for months. Leaked portions of the emails contain extensive communications between Clinton and Sidney Blumenthal — a longtime family ally. Blumenthal would often send Clinton memos on the security in Libya before the 2012 attacks that left four Americans dead.

Blumenthal's analyses of Libya was often met with skepticism from senior State Department officials, including Clinton. Gowdy asked the U.S. Marshals Service to serve Blumenthal with a subpoena on Tuesday.

The emails also give a personal look at Clinton's habits and relationships.

A Oct. 7, 2012 email from Blumenthal invited Clinton and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, to a dinner.

"Postelection, we'd like to have you over for dinner. Bill can come, too, if he's in town. Whatever works," Blumenthal wrote.

The rest of the 55,000 emails will be released to the public in stages. State proposed releasing those records next January, but a judge rejected that plan and ordered the agency to come up with a rolling schedule, which has yet to be finalized.

The documents released Friday are from January 2011 to Dec. 31, 2012, "and relate to the security of, and attacks on, the State Department facility in Benghazi and to the United States' diplomatic presence in Libya, including in Benghazi," Harf said.

Maryland Rep. Elijah Cummings, the top Democrat on the Benghazi panel, said in a statement that the committee should now schedule Clinton to testify.

"Instead of the selective leaking that has happened so far, the American people can now read all of these emails and see for themselves that they contain no evidence to back up claims that Secretary Clinton ordered a stand-down, approved an illicit weapons program, or any other wild allegation Republicans have made for years," Cummings said.

Hillary Discussed Speculation About Her Health With Aides In Emails

ALEX PAPPAS

Political Reporter

Then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton discussed with aides the chatter on cable news about whether she actually suffered a concussion in 2012, according to emails released by the State Department on Friday.

A week before she was to testify before Congress in December 2012 about the attacks in Benghazi, Clinton postponed her appearance with aides explaining she had fainted and suffered a concussion. On Dec. 20, chief of staff Cheryl Mills forwarded Clinton by email a transcript of Fox News host Greta Van Susteren discussing Clinton's health with Arizona Republican Sen. John McCain.

"Senator," Van Susteren said during that segment, "there is a report from the State Department that Secretary of State Hillary Clinton will testify on Benghazi before the middle of January. There has been some criticism of whether or not she has a concussion. I believe she has a concussion. What do you think?"

McCain replied: "I have never seen her back down. And I believe that she is now not physically well enough to testify and she will testify the middle of January."

Mills sent a transcript of that interview to Clinton's personal email — hrod@clintonemail.com — and to close aide Huma Abdein.

Speaking of McCain, Clinton replied: "Huma called him and [South Carolina Sen. Lindsey] Graham." "Also," Clinton added, "someone should call Greta VS to thank her for 'knowing the truth.'"

The emails released Friday, ahead of the Memorial Day weekend, are a few of the thousands the Democratic presidential candidate has turned over to the State Department from her personal email account. Clinton acknowledges she used that email account for both personal and official business.

Statement on the Release of Secretary Clinton's Benghazi Emails

Washington, DC— Select Committee on Benghazi Chairman Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., today issued the following statement after the State Department released 300 self-selected emails from former Secretary Hillary Clinton, over which the department had no control and no custody for nearly two years. These emails were turned over to the State by former Secretary Clinton in the fall of 2014 in reaction to a request from the Select Committee:

"More than six months after the Select Committee first discovered Secretary Clinton's unusual email arrangement with herself, and after the media discovered Secretary Clinton relied exclusively on a personal server housing a personal email account eschewing any official email address, State Department transferred 300 messages exclusively reviewed and released by her own lawyers," Gowdy said. "These lawyers, it must be noted, owed and continue to owe a fiduciary responsibility to Secretary Clinton to protect her interests. To assume a self-selected public record is complete, when no one with a duty or responsibility to the public had the ability to take part in the selection, requires a leap in logic no impartial reviewer should be required to make and strains credibility."

"It is also important to remember these email messages are just one piece of information that cannot be completely evaluated or fully understood without the total record. The Committee is working to collect and evaluate all of the relevant and material information necessary to evaluate the full range of issues in context. We will not reach any investigative conclusions until our work is complete, but these emails continue to reinforce the fact that unresolved questions and issues remain as it relates to Benghazi."

"The Select Committee continues to believe the American people have a right to the full and complete record of her official emails and, therefore, asked Secretary Clinton to turn her server and the full body of emails over to a neutral, detached, independent third party for review. This is also why the State Department must comply with a months-old subpoena for emails of the former Secretary's top aides, whose emails have never been received or reviewed by any congressional committee."

"The Committee's interest is in building a complete record from which the final, definitive accounting regarding the terrorist attacks in Benghazi can be provided. The best way to answer all questions related to the attacks in Benghazi continues to be having access to the full public record, not a "record" controlled, possessed and screened exclusively by Secretary Clinton's personal lawyers."

Background Information on Released Emails:

Among the emails the Select Committee finds highlight the existence of significant investigative questions:

characterization of the motives for the attacks. For example, Jake Sullivan noted, "You never said spontaneous or characterized the motives. In fact you were careful in your first statement to say we were assessing motive and method. The way you treated the video in the Libya context was to say that some sought to *justify* the attack on that basis."

August 24, 2012 — "H: Intel on new Libya president. Sid." In this document two and a half weeks before the attacks, Jake Sullivan writes to the Secretary, "Some warning signs," in response to the deteriorating security situation in Benghazi, which forced the Red Cross to suspend activities, and reinforces questions about what was done in response to these warnings.

April 4, 2012—"Secretary Clinton's Leadership on Libya." This document characterizes Secretary Clinton's ownership of U.S. policy in Libya.

April 8, 2011—"UK game playing; new rebel strategists; Egypt moves in. Sid" In this document, Secretary Clinton responded to a Blumenthal memo with, "Fyi. The idea of using private security experts to arm the opposition should be considered."

There are several instances of State personnel notifying the Secretary about security concerns and issues:

April 10, 2011 – Forwarded email about deteriorating security

April 22, 2011 – Request for continuous coverage in Benghazi, "security permitting"

April 24, 2011 – Forwarded email about hotels being targeted

June 10, 2011 – Email including information about credible threat info against hotel and that personnel are evacuating to alternate locations

August 21, 2011 – Email regarding concerns about Islamist militias

January 9, 2012 – Email stating that disarming and reintegrating of militias isn't going as well as they had hoped

February 24, 2012 – Email stating that militia rivalries are dangerous

August 24, 2012 – Email stating that there are "some warning signs"

The Committee also has an interest in understanding the inexplicable gaps in the Secretary's emails during key times of her involvement in Libyan policy, including:

June 10-August 8, 2011—Time period where Secretary Clinton was heavily involved in Libya policy

September 14-October 21 2011—Dates of Secretary Clinton's trip to Libya, when the now-famous picture of Clinton on her blackberry was taken

October 21, 2011-January 5, 2012—Time period when the State Department was extending the Benghazi mission for another year

April 27- July 4 2012—Time period of increased security during which an IED was thrown at the compound blasting a hole through the wall and during which the British ambassador was attacked

First Batch of Hillary Clinton's Emails on Libya Made Public

BY CARRIE DANN

<http://www.nbcnews.com/politics/hillary-clinton/first-batch-hillary-clintons-emails-libya-made-public-n362506>

A batch of Hillary Clinton's personal emails made public on Thursday morning offers a glimpse into her team's initial exchange of information in the wake of the Benghazi attacks as well as her relationship with longtime confidante Sidney Blumenthal, who sent her at least two dozen memos regarding Libya during her tenure as Secretary of State.

The State Department plans to release about 850 pages of the emails, which had been handed over to the congressional panel investigating the Benghazi attacks. But on Thursday, the New York Times released about a third of that batch of correspondence, which Clinton exchanged using a private server rather than a government email account.

The documents show that, while Clinton used her personal email account to receive information the government calls "sensitive," she did not appear to use her private server to exchange classified information.

The "sensitive" information included details like the location of State Department officials in Libya during a time of instability in the country in 2011.

The documents released by the New York Times also show that Clinton received numerous briefing memos about Libya from Blumenthal, a longtime friend of the Clintons who was not employed by the State Department. The New York Times reported earlier this week that Blumenthal was also involved with a possible business venture in the country at the time.

Two of those memos from Blumenthal came in the days immediately following the September 11, 2012 Benghazi attacks.

In one, sent on September 12, Blumenthal suggested that top security officers in the country believed that the attacks "were inspired by what many devout Libyan viewed as a sacrilegious internet video on the prophet Mohammed originating in America." Clinton forwarded that information to top adviser Jake Sullivan with the message "more info."

But another memo sent the following day indicated that the attacks may have actually been carried out by a militia group. Blumenthal wrote that officials in the country "believe that the attackers having prepared to launch their assault took advantage of the cover provided by the demonstrations in Benghazi protesting an internet production seen as disrespectful to the prophet Mohammed."

The release of the emails comes after a prolonged political fight for Clinton over her use of a private email server while serving as Secretary of State.

On Tuesday, Clinton urged the State Department to expedite the vetting of the emails after initial reports suggested that the data trove would not be ready for public release until January of next year

State Dept. releases Hillary Clinton e-mails in Benghazi probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton received information on her private email server about the deadly attack on U.S. diplomatic facilities in Benghazi that was classified Friday at the FBI's request.

The email in question, forwarded to Clinton by her deputy chief of staff, relates to reports of arrests in Libya of possible suspects in the attack.

The information was not classified at the time the email was sent and was upgraded from unclassified to "secret" on Friday, according to State Department officials. The officials said 23 words of the November 2012 message were redacted from the release of 896 emails totaling 296 pages, to protect information that may damage foreign relations.

They said no other redactions were made for classification reasons.

Spokeswoman Marie Harf says publication includes 296 e-mails given to a House committee investigating the 2012 attack on the US diplomatic post in Benghazi, Libya.

She says redactions were made according to Freedom of Information Act standards. The emails will be released via the State Department's FOIA website, foia.state.gov.

The documents cover e-mails between 2011 and 2012 related to the Benghazi facility and its security, and to the broader issue of a US diplomatic presence in Libya.

Harf says the e-mails don't provide new facts about how four Americans were killed on Sept. 11, 2012. The State Department also said on Twitter that the emails don't provide a change in its understanding of the events.

The State Department is still reviewing 55,000 further pages of e-mails from Clinton's private email account. They'll be published on a rolling basis.

U.S. Senator Bennet Earns Support of Colorado Working Families

SEIU Members Endorse Michael Bennet

DENVER, CO – Today, healthcare workers, janitors, security officers, property service workers the other hardworking members of Service Employees International Union (SEIU) Local 105, united in endorsing Senator Michael Bennet for the U.S. Senate.

"Senator Bennet is standing up for healthcare reform and the public option," said Dee Ann Blaine, a radiographer from Broomfield and member of the Local 105 Executive Board. "There are 2,500 Colorado healthcare workers in Local 105, making us the largest healthcare union in the state. We know Senator Bennet won't stop fighting until we have meaningful healthcare reform that lowers costs and ends the insurance industry's stranglehold on our healthcare system."

"Everyone knows that there's a lot left to do in Washington," said Orville Bryant, a cashier who works at Denver International Airport and is a member of the Local 105 Executive Board. "Senator Bennet has earned our support because he's focused on creating good jobs for ourselves and our children right here in Colorado. Working families just want a chance at the American Dream, which is why we need leaders like Michael Bennet. He's working to rebuild our economy so it works for everyone through policies like the DREAM Act and reining in the reckless behavior on Wall Street."

"The last decade was the first in the history of this country where the economy grew and median family income actually declined; a decade in which wages fell, while the cost of health care and higher education went up by double digits," said Bennet. "Working families in Colorado and across the country can't afford another decade like the last - they deserve better. They deserve a politics that puts their interests above the special interests; a politics that delivers on meaningful health insurance reform, fixes our broken immigration system, and makes our economy work for hardworking Coloradans. These are efforts SEIU has fought for for years, and I'm glad to join them in the fight for Colorado's working families."

SEIU Local 105 brings together over 6,000 healthcare workers, janitors, security guards and other property service workers who are building innovative partnerships with their employers and winning better wages, healthcare and more secure jobs for Colorado. With 2.2 million members in Canada, the United States and Puerto Rico, SEIU is the fastest-growing union in the Americas. Focused on uniting workers in healthcare, public services and property services, SEIU members are winning better wages, healthcare and more secure jobs for our communities, while uniting their strength with their counterparts around the world to help ensure that workers—not just corporations and CEOs—benefit from today's global economy.

John - I hope this note finds you well. Wanted to send along some info that I thought you and the campaign might find of interest.

After I left the White House I gave a lot of thought to how we bring new voices in the climate debate. And, more importantly, how we expand the conversation to climate risk and preparedness. Well...fast forward a year and change, a lot of analysis and the work by a great team of researchers....and voila: <http://statesatrisk.org/> comes to life.

Earlier today, leaders from government, policy, business, planning and academia launched this first-of-its kind report highlighting how states across the country are largely unprepared to face the significant and increasing risks posed by changing levels of extreme weather - specifically extreme heat, drought, wildfires, inland flooding and coastal flooding threats. The report, States at Risk: America's Preparedness Report Card, was prepared by the States at Risk Project and provides a grade to each of the 50 states based on their unique profile of threats to help provide a benchmark to assess risks and build and implement action plans to increase preparedness levels.

WHY:

Between 2011 and 2013, the federal government spent $136 billion – or almost $400 in taxes from each American household each year – on disaster relief. From providing emergency health services to rebuilding infrastructure, recovering from extreme weather events is extraordinarily expensive—and unfortunately, very few states have taken significant action to prepare for future threats.

About States at Risk: America's Preparedness Report Card

States at Risk: America's Preparedness Report Card is the first-ever quantitative assessment of how prepared the 50 states are to face risks posed by changing levels of extreme heat, drought, wildfires, inland flooding and coastal flooding linked to climate change. The Report Card is designed to help provide a path forward for states to assess risks and build and implement action plans to increase their preparedness levels.

Please check it out if you have some time. The press release and messaging guidance is attached. We spent a lot of time in battleground states figuring out how to fine tune the message. And we are going to be pushing this in six key states with local events. To date, we have a lot of interest from local news outlets, with a major focus on meteorologists.

Hope it's helpful in some way!

Best,
Heather

STEVE KORNACKI: joining me is john podesta.

JOHN PODESTA: good to see you, steve.

STEVE KORNACKI: i saw your campaign put out an advisory for tuesday night, the night of the new hampshire primary. you didn't call it a victory party.

JOHN PODESTA: well, we're fighting for every vote here, steve. we know we're behind. senator sanders is very well known here. he started off very popular.

STEVE KORNACKI: wait, wait. did he really? i keep hearing this. his vermont advantage. i'm not so sure about that.

JOHN PODESTA: he's the whole part of the state is in his media market. he's very well known, started off with high approval ratings.

STEVE KORNACKI: but most of the state is the boston media market.

JOHN PODESTA: and the burlington media market. but he's been popular. we know. we came here behind. we're fighting for every vote. that's what she's doing. she's at new england college talking to young people, trying to tell them why she thinks she'd bow a better president. that's what she did last night, talking directly to his voters. we've got 10,000 volunteers out over the weekend trying to convince people that she's the person that can get the job done, build a better future, reduce the giant debt load that people have coming out of college, get wages growing. so we're going to fight for every vote and hope to do well here.

STEVE KORNACKI: what would be a success? what would allow you to stand up here on tuesday night and say, okay, we fell short.

JOHN PODESTA: well, i'm not going to put a number on it.

STEVE KORNACKI: single digits? does it have to be single digits?

JOHN PODESTA: i'm not going to put a number on it, but i think new hampshire has been good to Hillary. she loves this state, she loves campaigning here, so we're going to just do everything we can to get as close as we can and hopefully get right up to the edge of this. but we know we start -- we came here from iowa after we won iowa. we knew we were behind and we know we need to catch up and that's what we're trying to do this weekend.

STEVE KORNACKI: let me ask you, one of the issues that came up, there was a lot of talk in that debate, wall street came up. this also came up in the forum cnn held but these speeches, big paid speeches, $675,000 for one of them, would she release the transcripts of those speeches. is that something that you guys have talked about?

JOHN PODESTA: she said she'd look at it. she also said that once new hampshire is done, she'll take a look at that. but i think two things. one is that this charge is being really leveled. it's another one of these cases of innuendo, trying to suggest that her position can be influenced by campaign contributions or speeches, and that's -- nothing could be further from the truth. she stood up to wall street when she was a senator, she's got the most comprehensive plan as a candidate and i think when you strip away the innuendo, that's what this is all b i would say there's also a double standard going on. there are a lot of candidates running around the state of new hampshire that have given speeches and i haven't heard anybody ask for their transcripts.

STEVE KORNACKI: i think one of the concerns when you say was there any influence exerted here, one of things that was brought up is elizabeth warren said publicly when Hillary Clinton was first lady, elizabeth warren went and talked to her about the bankruptcy bill and elizabeth warren said Hillary Clinton was on our side. she was against that. then Hillary Clinton went and ran for the senate in new york. she took money from wall street. wall street was a constituent of hers and then when it came up in the united states senate, she switched sides.

JOHN PODESTA: i see what she said but it's important to note that when the bill came up that was enacted into law, Hillary Clinton said she was against it. she would have voted against it. she said it was flawed, it was bad for the country, she was in the hospital with president Clinton because he had his heart incident then, so she couldn't be on the floor to vote against it but she firmly stated her position against it. so, you know, i know i've seen what senator warren has said, but i think what she and senator warren talked about when she was first lady was the need to make sure that women and children were protected, that their alimony payments would be protected and she's fought hard to make sure that that was the case. but when that bill that came law came up, she was firmly opposed to it.

STEVE KORNACKI: let me ask you about some of the bigger picture things. you guys won iowa, i think you're still well positioned after new hampshire. we all know about the south carolina numbers and everything. that said, a year ago when people were looking at this race between Hillary Clinton and bernie sanders, nobody would have expected or believed that it would be as close as it was in iowa and that he'd be ahe in new hampshire. what does it say to you that this case has gotten as close as it is.

JOHN PODESTA: we expected a challenge. no one believed us when we had that in the spring and during the mmer. we expected a serious challenge and we always took senator sanders seriously. he's, you know, he's fired up a certain portion of the democratic base.

STEVE KORNACKI: you didn't think you'd be down in new hampshire.

JOHN PODESTA: well, you know, we always knew that senator sanders would run very strong here. he was ahead all through the fall with a brief period of time right after the benghazi hearings and the first debate where we pulled a little bit ahead of him up here.

STEVE KORNACKI: but when he started -- i went and looked. when he said, you know, i think i'm going to run for president next year, he was at 6% here. so that's where he started out.

JOHN PODESTA: we think he's run a good race but we think we've run a good race. Hillary is out there talking about what she will do and i think most importantly that she's got a track record for her whole life making change happen, getting the job done. that's what she's promising, that she's someone who can get results and whether that's raising wages, getting equal pay for women, getting child care in this country, making sure the affordable care act works for everybody, controlling the price of prescription drugs, she's got the experience and the plans to get the job done. i think she's offering an optimistic sense of what the future can be under a Clinton presidency and i think that's what will take the case to the people of new hampshire and beyond.

STEVE KORNACKI: and when you see, again, you guys won iowa, but when you look at the entrance poll there, that age gap that popped in there, i can't remember ever seeing that in politics. president obama in 2008 had an advantage with younger voters but this was a 70-point margin for bernie sanders among people under 30. Hillary Clinton obviously did very well at the other end of the spectrum, but what do you make of that excitement --

JOHN PODESTA: he's done a great job firing up young people. and again, Hillary spoke to that last night. she said i welcome that. it's great to get people into the system. she spoke directly to those young people. that's what she's doing really as we're speaking to each other, to say let me tell you about, you know, what my experience has been, how she's been an activist her whole life, how when she was a young person she went, again, in her first job, she didn't go -- she didn't go to wall street. what she did was go to the children's defense fund. she went to south carolina to get juveniles out of adult prisons. she went to alabama to get segregated academies desegregated and have them lose their tax status. she went to new bedford to canvas on behalf of kids. she's fought for kids and families her whole life. and i think when young people know that about her, they see somewhat the sordid picture through the media, but when they find that out they'll get a better picture of her and that's what she's done her whole life. but there's no question that senator sanders has lit them up and, you know, to his credit he's done that.

STEVE KORNACKI: john podesta, appreciate the time.

JOHN PODESTA: thanks, steve.

Two flags:

1) "Let's give special support to young people who need help the most, including those at historically black colleges and universities, which play such a vital role all across our country."

This line seems to equate going to an HBCU with needing help the most - it jumped out at me when I read it. I don't think we should conflate the two.

2) "We have to break down all the barriers, and that includes those that stand in the way of people of color sharing fully in the promise of America. Because the truth is, more than half a century after Rosa Parks sat, Dr. King marched, and John Lewis bled, race still plays a significant role in determining who gets ahead in America and who gets left behind.

Here in Cleveland you know this all too well. We wept with you when Tamir [Ta-meer] Rice was shot. He should be alive today. He should be healthy and happy and dreaming about the future.

Too many other children here are growing up in poverty. And more than 14 percent of Cleveland kids have been exposed to dangerous levels of lead – that's even more than in Flint."

I'm probably being hypersensitive here but when I read this it almost felt like we were transitioning from talking about race to talking about poverty too quickly - could be criticized for doing just what we are knocking Bernie for.

Wow, I'd be surprised if she didn't endorse Bernie. Especially because of the VT connection (we went to the same high school...small world). But maybe she'll feel differently because of her race. Let's get a call sheet into Kirsten...I'll also ask the dccc if they're working w her.

I don't have it but maybe you should put Gillibrand on the case. Gillibrand would not endorse my guy who is homegrown for the district bc she won't go against a woman (even though I hear she is not a fan of Zephyr). Zephyr would be out of her mind happy to get attention from Gillibrand bc she is very popular here.

I bet Z won't endorse Bernie at this point bc she sees the writing on the wall and it would be crucial to have Hillary support her here in the general if Z indeed wins the primary. But also bc it's so contentious here: Dems are really split between Bernie and Hillary and it gets nasty. Zephyr would be insane to come out in favor of one or the other at this point in the race. Also here she has to paint herself as a moderate not a progressive bc she can't win without some crossover.

Down ticket voting is her only hope for a win against Faso so she can't afford to alienate Hillary.

But then, people do dumb things all the time.

Zephyr. Yes. Big problem.

But I got mad at our guy bc he has weak political instincts. I set him up with great connections (not just donors but real strategists) and he failed to follow up etc.

Zephyr is going to lose big time here. Our guy would have won but he has no path to win the primary. Ugh. I could go on and on. See I am learning politics from the ground level up. Haha.

Also - here is a story & tell me if you think Ben would like to hear it or not.

We had a party and this guy was there Zach Feuer...apparently some art big wig. We had a buffet in the dining room and this guy stopped short in front of Ben's painting, turned to our friend Zohar and said, shocked: "Is that a Ben Edwards?"

Zohar (who is an illustrator & so knew), said yes. And then Zohar went on to say, "Did you know he was roommates with Julie Mehretu, and he came up with the concept first, she copied it, and took off?" Zach said, "Yes, that's right. Lots of people in the art world know that. We all thought Ben would be the major star instead of her."

So you see, that story cuts both ways. But I'm telling you & you can decide whether or how to tell him.

Dear Neera,

We hope that you are off to a happy and healthy new year. Although there are still eight months until our 20th Reunion on October 21-23, that time has a way of passing all too quickly. Therefore, this letter brings two requests for your consideration.

First, please attend our reunion! Alumni Weekend will be a rare opportunity to catch up with many friends in a group setting and to reconnect with old friends we have not seen in many years. The formal invitation is forthcoming, but in the meantime you can find more information by visiting www.law.yale.edu/aw2016.

Second, please consider a gift or multi-year pledge in honor of our 20th Reunion. We are pleased to report that due to the support of 34 classmates (17% of the class), thus far we have raised $139,202 in gifts and pledges. For our 20th Reunion, we would love to achieve 100% participation if possible.

We hope you will give as generously as you can. Please keep in mind that any amount pledged can be paid over five years, but the full amount will be credited to our 20th Reunion Campaign total. Our collective generosity will support the Law School's goal to expand clinical and experiential learning for students, and increase financial aid and loan forgiveness for recent graduates. Your gift will also preserve the programs and activities that you found most rewarding during your Yale Law School experience.

You know what a difference a legal education at Yale has made in your life. The Law School continues to have the finest faculty, an exhilarating academic environment, and a stimulating mix of students—in short, all of the ingredients for an extraordinary legal education. Your support at any level will help ensure that today's students continue to have access to this unique opportunity.

A member of our class Reunion Gift Committee will contact you soon about your participation in our 20th Reunion Campaign. But if you would like to make your gift or pledge today, please click here.

We thank you in advance for your support, and we look forward to seeing you in New Haven this October to celebrate our 20th Reunion.

Sincerely,
Omar Dajani '96, Allegra Lawrence-Hardy '96, J. Welby Leaman '96, and Tarun Stewart '96

Hi!

I'm Chris. Normally I work with Maura, but with Election Day so close, everyone at Maloney HQ is pitching in and talking to voters 24/7 to make sure they get to the polls. With our race officially a "toss-up" and polls TIED, we've got our work cut out for us.

We're about to launch a canvass into Newburgh to remind 2,758 Democrats to vote, but the printer's out of toner and the volunteers are getting bags under their eyes. We NEED more resources – food, water, printer supplies, clipboards – to keep this operation going, and it adds up fast. Can you contribute \$250 now to turn out voters so Sean wins?

We're counting on you – thanks!

FLASHBACK: In 2006, Sen. Gregg Was Repulsed 'Obstruction For The Purpose Of Obstruction'

<http://thinkprogress.org/2009/12/03/gregg-obstruction-memo/>

Yesterday, the Politico obtained a copy of a memo authored by Sen. Judd Gregg (R-NH) outlining exactly how Senate Republicans can kill health reform using various parliamentary tactics. Some of the tactics include: demanding a new legislative day, forcing "hard" quorum calls, and compelling GOP Senators to offer an "unlimited number of amendments — germane or non-germane — on any subject" to the health bill. Gregg's colleagues attempted a similar obstruction strategy to kill health reform in committee, offering dozens of frivolous amendments to bog down the debate.

But in 2006, Gregg sang a very different tune about appropriate Senate procedure. At the time, Gregg wanted to form an Entitlement Commission to recommend cuts to Medicare and Social Security. Facing opposition, Gregg blasted Democrats for what he perceived as "obstruction for the purpose of obtaining power":

Obstruction has become the only thing which the other side of the aisle appears to be able to do, obstruction for the purpose of obstruction for the purpose of obtaining power around here.

Watch it:

Given Gregg's previous comments deploring Senate obstruction, his current obstruction memo reveals how disingenuous he is willing to be in order to stop health reform. Rather than argue the merits of the legislation, Gregg is resorting to parliamentary gimmicks to kill the bill. As ThinkProgress has documented, obstruction has been the prime strategy for Republicans hoping to stop reform.

 Organizing for America

John --

This week, the President sent his budget to Congress.

It's a plan to rebuild our economy and win the future -- a plan that will prepare our country and our children for the jobs and industries of tomorrow.

It's a proposal to live within our means so we can invest in our future.

But the budget can be complex, confusing, and easy to distort in a partisan environment. President Obama will rely on our help -- the on-the-ground organizing we know works -- to make the case alongside him.

That's why we want your input.

Take a minute to learn about the President's top budget priorities, and then let us know which is the most important to you.

Your feedback will help guide the work we do and the strategies we employ in the coming months, as the fights in Washington over the budget come to a head.

The President's vision is ambitious yet responsible. While making the tough decisions on some things we can't afford, the budget also makes targeted investments where we need them to create jobs and secure a brighter future for new generations.

It comes down to whether we're able to live up to the vision the President laid out in five pillars:

-- Innovate: Invest heavily in research and development, more than double funding for energy efficiency advances, and put 1 million electric vehicles on the road by 2015.

-- Educate: Expand the Race to the Top program, encourage school funding reform by rewarding success and innovation, train 100,000 new math and science teachers, and make it more affordable for millions more students to pay for college.

-- Build: Create hundreds of thousands of jobs off the bat with investments in infrastructure, bring high-speed Internet access to 98 percent of Americans, and support the goal of supplying high-speed rail to 80 percent of Americans within 25 years.

-- Be fiscally responsible: Reduce the deficit by more than $1 trillion over the next 10 years, bring non-security discretionary spending to the lowest levels since Eisenhower, and live up to the President's pledge to cut the deficit he inherited in half before the end of his first term.

-- Reform government: Embrace competitive grant models that encourage innovation and save taxpayer dollars, cut administrative overhead costs by billions, and establish a process to reorganize government to make it better serve the goal of a competitive America.

Whether we can out-innovate, out-educate, and out-build the rest of the world depends on the direction this country takes right now.

And each of us is a critical messenger for this administration.

When we talk to friends and family, when we knock on our neighbors' doors, and when we discuss the news with coworkers, we communicate so much more than any talking head or political ad ever could.

We'll be the ones making the case in our communities. So weigh in on what part of the President's vision you want to see take priority:

Mitch

Subject: Re: Signage

Since we want both a call to action and drive our "HRC will stand up to the Republicans" why don't we just use a variation of that which brings them into it:

Stand Up to The GOP

Stand Up To The GOP In February

In IA caucus goes literally stand up at their meeting places for their candidates so it will have double meaning. It would also allow HRC to lead into the message we want in the closing argument. "On caucus night I need you to come stand up to the GOP because there is a lot at stake....

I still like the other call to action "Join the Fight" or "Join the Fight in February"

I am not ready to give up on "fight." It is a word of action and we saw early on that voters believe HRC is strong and tough and "fight" encapsulates her best traits. We wanted to drive "fight for you" because we felt we needed to fill the deficit between her being seen as a fighter and her being a fighter for you. And we have made real progress with our paid communication. It has worked. And if you are a fighter voters think you get results. They work together

I don't believe we are in his lane when we portray her as a fighter I believe we are doing important work in competing with BS as someone who fights for people like you.

In IA, SC & NV HRC gets scores 68, 75 & 65 in intensity on "fighting for people like you." those are high scores. Even in NH she gets a 68.

In IA she does better than BS when going head to head on "fighting for people like you" and while we lag behind BS in NH when you isolate it among Dems it is less stark and we compete.

My point is that it is not that we are in a lane he owns — she gets good marks now for fighting for people like you when voters rate her — so we are competing in an important lane. So if using "fight" helps make a call to action more clearly and succinctly we should not take it off the table.

I do think we need some freshness for the final push. And I don't consider it merely semantic to say this is about "evolving" our sloganeering and visual branding, not "changing" it. They are certainly imperfect, and I'm sending more than I intended to (caving to the "speak now" piece), but here are some ideas that lean more heavily into the urgency/stakes:

Your vote has never mattered more.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Caucusing has never mattered more.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Caucus. It matters.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Vote. It matters.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Your vote, America's future.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Your vote, our future.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Do it for your family. Vote.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Do it for our future. Vote.
Hillary Clinton. President.

Because America's future is on the line.
Hillary Clinton. President.

In a perfect world, this endgame slogan would help our side with the emotive contrasts likely to evolve between now and February – Fresh v. Stale, Electric v. Static, Exciting v. If we cannot hit on that do people have strong feelings about changing to Making a Difference for You, or stick with what we have? My two favorites and I think we can use both:

Your fights are her fights

She's got what it takes

These both go to her strengths and are completely on our message.

We have been talking internally about changing our events signs in January to better reflect the latest research and signal a change to our closing argument. Right now we are using Fighting for Us. The only two other suggestions we have here are Join the Fight and It's Your Time to put the focus on voters, but realize neither really captures our message.

If we are going to change the signs we need to finalize the new language by cob today to start production. I thought we would start this conversation and brainstorming via email, but if we want to get on the phone at some point today too that works.

First, do you think we should change? Second, ideas on what the new sign should say? Once we have your input we'll loop in Robby, John and Huma to make a final decision. Thanks.

Hi,

I trust all is well despite your being, once again, fully engaged on important matters of state. She's in good hands! I write to ask a favor on behalf of my Godson (who been a "surrogate" son given I do not have children). Of course, if you're the wrong guy, prefer not to or are otherwise inundated with the same, please just say so and I'll certainly understand.

My Godson, Travis Hutchinson, who is scheduled to enter his 4th year at Yale (math and economics major), expressed interest in taking the upcoming year-off to work on the Clinton campaign. His keen interest and experience in behavioral sciences, data/marketing and finance offsets his lack of prior political experience. While I'm biased, many would agree Travis is a terrific guy - a leader, smart, hard-worker and team player.

In the interest of full disclosure, he took-off last year, not to "find himself," but due to a concussion similar to that experienced by Mrs. Clinton. He is fully healed and ready to go back to school "but for" his desire for a once in a lifetime opportunity to work with the Clinton campaign. Attached is his resume.

Would you be so kind as to point Travis in the right direction to be considered for a position with the campaign. Unfortunately, there's not much I can do given last September I joined the Administration as Chief Counsel of the FAA. While Travis is a NY'r, in the event a position were available only in DC I would strive to make that happen consistent with my various federal obligations.

Many thanks in advance for reading and considering this favor. Best personal wishes, Reggie

An outline of the items we discussed yesterday is attached. Aside from seeing if this works generally, I highlighted a few items in yellow that need specific input.

--I included a section called "what's ahead" which will cover upcoming administration and congressional activity. I think it would be good to have a memo on what's coming down the road (Simas mentioned immigration, CR/ Omnibus, Ebola policy/funding, and Iran, but I'm sure there are others). I don't know if that's best for Jake to do...or if there's someone who can volunteer time at the WH to do that.

--I also included the Obama section we discussed...I think it would also be good to have some thoughts on paper about this. Would Jake or Dan be the best people to do that?

--I added a section on general election planning

Hey John, we'd be happy to try to meet up.

I'm hosting Penny Pritzker that night and just need to find out if it's going to be early or late.

We'll be back to you asap.

Jeffrey and Andy--

I'm in LA on Wednesday late afternoon for the bundler roadshow. Don't know whether either of you are attending that, but I was wondering whether you had any interest in getting together for a quick meeting or a drink afterwards.

The event is in Beverly Hills and finishes around 6:45 pm. Any chance?

Eryn has more details if you need them.

Thanks,
John

Latest on Senator Gillibrand's Work--

Leading Reform: "For a newcomer, her knowledge of the economy was impressive as she responded non-stop to a series of questions and took control of the conversation with a command one expects from New York's Senior Senator. She has travelled the state and is aware of, and committed to, addressing the different economic demands of each region. What captured our imagination was the reform agenda of the nation's newest Senator..." Read the rest of the Queens Tribune story here

Transparency: The top issue she'll be talking about on the campaign trail - Kirsten was the first member of Congress to post her personal financial disclosure, earmark requests, and list of official daily meetings online for all her constituents to see. Lanny Davis based part of his column on Kirsten's transparency work. His article entitled "Senator Gillibrand: Color her transparent and purple" can be found at Lockerbie Bomber: Kirsten appeared on Morning Joe, Good Day NY and the Today Show (see links below) urging the UK to launch a full investigation into BP's potential involvement in the release of Al-Megrahi, the only person convicted of the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing that killed 270 people, including 189 Americans.

Child Nutrition/School Lunches/Child Obesity: Kirsten has made combating child obesity one of her top priorities. In August she helped pass the Child Nutrition Act, which she says is a good step in the right direction. Kirsten is the first NY Senator to sit on the Agriculture Committee in nearly 40 years and she brought Rachael Ray to the Hill to lobby colleagues on the subject - see the NY Times story at <http://www.nytimes.com/2010/05/12/nyregion/12food.html>

TELL CONGRESS: Protect LGBT Workers from Discrimination!

John,

Recently, we've seen landmark progress toward equality. But one area is still lagging: the workplace.

Today, in 29 states, workers can be fired for no reason other than who they are or who they love. That's unacceptable.

A bipartisan majority on a key Senate committee voted last month to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, which would extend basic rights to LGBT workers.

We are now closer to passing ENDA than we've been in the 19 years since it was first introduced.

Friends –

After decades of tireless organizing, equality is on a winning streak.

The momentum that began in November continued when the Supreme Court struck down DOMA.

And a few weeks ago, we took another step when a Senate committee voted 15-7 to advance the Employment Non-Discrimination Act. Three Republicans voted "yes," including conservative Sen. Orrin Hatch.

Twenty-nine states currently protect employers who want to fire people solely because of who they are or who they love. ENDA is a critical step toward protecting LGBT employees.

Click here to show your support for passing ENDA and guaranteeing basic

workplace rights to all Americans.

Federal law protects workers from being terminated based on their race, religion, age, gender or disability status. ENDA extends that same basic protection to LGBT workers in the 29 states where there are no such safeguards.

It's been 19 years since ENDA was first introduced in Congress. The recent bipartisan vote in the Senate sends a signal to the House that the time has come for full equality in the workplace.

Together, we can take action to end workplace discrimination. You can help by joining my colleagues and me in demanding that Congress move immediately to pass ENDA.

Click here to add your name to the effort to pass ENDA.

Thanks for standing with us and for all that you do,

Subject: CEA's analysis of the third estimate of Q2 GDP

Please find below CEA’s blog post on today’s GDP data.

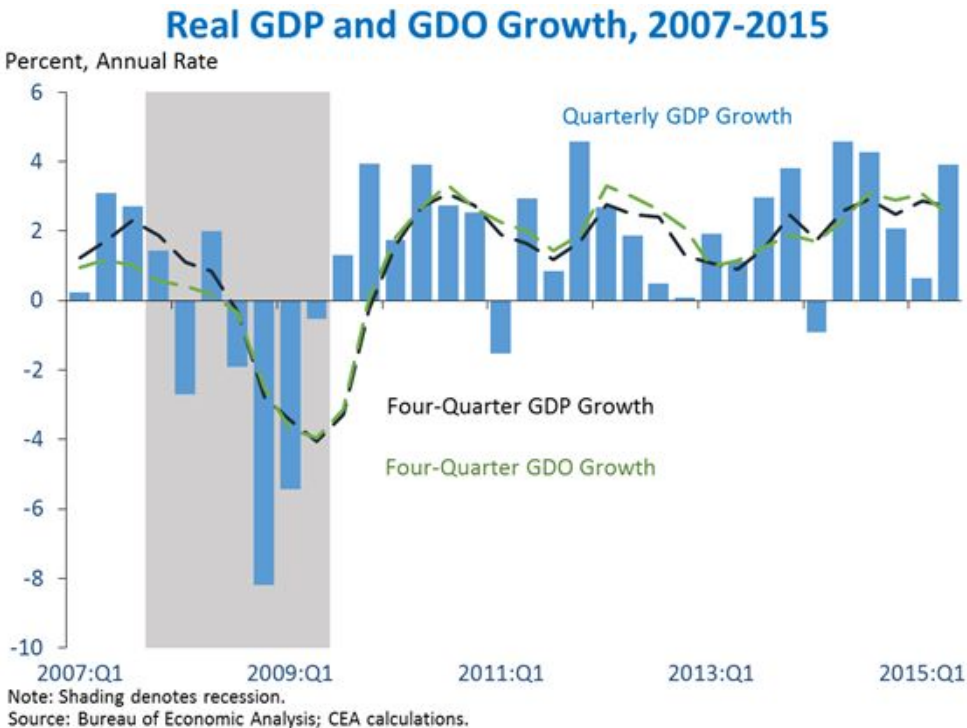

<https://www.whitehouse.gov/blog/2015/09/25/third-estimate-gross-domestic-product-second-quarter-2015>

Third Estimate of Gross Domestic Product for the Second Quarter of 2015

Real GDP growth in the second quarter was revised up for a second time, as consumers spent more and businesses invested more than previously estimated. This morning’s report confirms that the economy grew at a much faster pace in the second quarter than in the first, with strong personal consumption leading the rebound. Over the first half of 2015, domestic demand remained robust, even as slowing foreign demand and reduced oil-driven drilling investment dragged on growth. Because we face global headwinds, it is essential that we continue to do everything we can to maintain America’s domestic economic momentum—including avoiding a return to fiscal brinksmanship or unnecessary austerity by passing a budget that reverses the sequester and avoids another government shutdown, increasing investments in infrastructure as part of a long-term transportation reauthorization, and other steps to foster long-term growth.

FIVE KEY POINTS IN TODAY’S REPORT FROM THE BUREAU OF ECONOMIC ANALYSIS (BEA)

1. Real Gross Domestic Product (GDP) rose 3.9 percent at an annual rate in the second quarter according to the BEA’s third estimate, well above the first quarter’s 0.6 percent pace. In the second quarter, the increase in GDP growth was led by a faster pace of personal consumption growth than in the first quarter. Structures investment, which declined in the first quarter amid low oil prices, was revised up and grew 6.2 percent at an annual rate. Overall, real GDP has now risen 2.7 percent over the past four quarters. Real Gross Domestic Output (GDO) — an alternative gauge of economic output that is potentially more accurate \(though not typically stronger or weaker\) over the long term , which BEA calls “the average of GDP and Gross Domestic Income (GDI)” — rose 2.3 percent in the second quarter and has risen 2.5 percent over the past four quarters, indicating a similar trend for growth as GDP albeit with a different quarterly pattern.

2. The 0.2 percentage point upward revision to real second-quarter GDP growth is more than accounted for by improvements in the most stable and persistent components of economic output. Personal consumption growth contributed 0.3 percentage point to the total revision, reflecting upward revisions to various components of services consumption. Fixed investment contributed 0.2 percentage point, reflecting upward revisions to both business fixed investment and residential investment. Together, consumption and fixed investment constitute Private Domestic Final Purchases (PDFP), the largest and most stable component of output (see point 3 for more on PDFP). These revisions were partially offset by small downward revisions to inventory investment and net exports, two especially volatile components that generally provide less information about the path of future growth.

3. Real private domestic final purchases (PDFP)—the sum of consumption and fixed investment—rose 3.9 percent at an annual rate in the second quarter and is growing at a faster year-over-year pace than overall GDP. Real PDFP—which excludes noisy components like net exports, inventories, and government spending—is generally a more reliable indicator of next-quarter GDP growth than current GDP. PDFP aims to measure signals of future economic growth by eliminating some of the noisy components in GDP. Of course, to the extent that systematic patterns emerge in global growth, for example, the information contained in noisier components like net exports may be valuable—and they should not be ignored.

Because the GDP revision was concentrated in consumption and fixed investment, PDFP was revised up by 0.6 percentage point, considerably more than overall GDP. Over the past four quarters, PDFP grew by 3.5 percent, a faster rate than overall GDP growth. Similar to the relationship between GDP and PDFP, the sum of wages and corporate profits is an especially important component of Gross Domestic Income (GDI), the income-side output measure that is averaged with GDP to produce GDO. While PDFP tends to predict next-quarter GDP especially well, wages and profits tend to predict GDP over the next four quarters well—despite being more volatile than PDFP. Real wages and profits have grown 2.6 percent over the past four quarters, roughly in line with current trends in GDP and GDO.

4. Gross domestic output (GDO) —the average of GDP and GDI—does a better job predicting next quarter’s GDP growth than GDP itself, but PDFP has even more predictive power. The table below shows the results from a series of regressions in which the last four quarters of output growth—according to various measures—are used to predict next quarter’s GDP growth. The analysis uses data from 1984 to 2014. The results show that the growth rate of GDO in each of the last four quarters is a better predictor of GDP than GDP itself—and just as good a predictor as GDI. In addition to the three measures of aggregate output, the table shows the predictive power of PDFP and wages and profits. PDFP has the most power of any of the measures to predict future economic growth.

*Wages + Profits are deflated using the implicit price deflator for GDP.

Note: Final estimate data from 1984:Q1 to 2014:Q4 are used incorporating all revisions made by the BEA in subsequent years. The one-quarter-ahead, annualized growth in real output (GDP, GDI, and GDO) is regressed individually on four lags of one-quarter annualized growth in GDP, GDI, GDO, PDFP, and Wages + Profits. "Ability to Predict" is the R-Squared of the regression (100 indicates perfect predictive power).

5. Over the first half of 2015, GDP grew at a slightly lower pace than in the prior two years, as exports and drilling investment grew below the earlier pace but non-drilling business investment grew faster. Two major headwinds weighed on GDP in the first half of the year: a slight decline in exports as we faced slowing demand from abroad and a sharp decline in drilling investment as producers faced lower oil prices. But core components of domestic demand remained resilient. Personal consumption contributed roughly the same amount to growth over the first half of 2015 as it did over 2013 and 2014. Business fixed investment—when excluding the contributions of drilling—has grown at a successively faster pace in each calendar year, led by rising investment in research and development and other intellectual property investment.

As the Administration stresses every quarter, GDP figures can be volatile and are subject to substantial revision. Therefore, it is important not to read too much into any one single report, and it is informative to consider each report in the context of other data that are becoming available.

Subject: And a human future for all!

Dear Subscriber,

The coming year could be a tipping point. Will we use human biotechnologies to help the sick and advance scientific understanding, or misuse them in risky experiments to produce genetically “enhanced” humans?

With the help of supporters like you, the Center for Genetics and Society has made great strides in explaining that we can prevent the transmission of genetic diseases without engineering the genes of future children. And that opening the door to GM humans could have dire social consequences: It could all too easily lead to new kinds of discrimination and increase our already shameful levels of inequality.

Brave New World and GATTACA are fiction, but the futures they depict could get uncomfortably close to reality. Our combined efforts can ensure that those futures never come to be.

With your help, we’ll keep working toward a human future in which:

- the criminal justice system uses DNA to exonerate the innocent, not to fish for suspects or put communities under genetic surveillance
- all people who need medical assistance to form families can access it, without exploiting women for their eggs or wombs
- race is understood as a political and social category, not a genetic one
- disability is seen as part of human variation, rather than automatically understood as something to fix
- genetic testing is used to improve health care without compromising our privacy, encouraging unneeded medical interventions, or putting profits above well-being.

Together we can build broad awareness about the social justice, human rights, and public interest framework we need to guide human biotechnologies. And we can keep that vision in front of policy makers and top-tier media.

Please join us in these efforts. A gift of any size will make a real difference.

To a just and peaceful new year,

Subject: Missing Pedometer

Hi All,

My pedometer has wandered off. It looks like the one below but with a belt clip that is supposed to keep it at my side. If you have seen it, please send it back... I would like to give it a stern warning about the dangers of going off with strangers.

Thanks!

Charles

Subject: Thank You

John,

I know we've emailed a lot – and it's almost over, I promise.

First, thank you so much for all of your support. I'd never have made it here without you.

Second (and I'm sorry), I need to ask you one more time for a contribution. Our team will be getting up long before dawn tomorrow to prepare to turn out voters: reminder calls, ponchos in case it rains, even rides to the polls if folks need them. But we need just a couple more bucks to do it. Please, if you have anything to spare, click here to contribute now. We just can't lose in the final hours.

Thank you,

Sean

Attachments: Liscow - Should Law Be Efficient - Nov. 2015.pdf

Greetings, colleagues. This Friday the colloquium welcomes Zachary Liscow. Zach is currently a law clerk for the Hon. Stephen Williams of the D.C. Circuit, and reportedly in possession of offers of employment at a few law schools you've probably heard of. His talk this week asks "Should Law Be Efficient?" That is, there are important strands in the cost-benefit analysis literature, and in torts, among others, that argue that legal rules and regulations should not take account of their own distributive consequences, but instead should leave that task to the tax system. Zach shows empirically that the tax system does not actually effectuate the redistributive goals that CBA theorists assume it will, and explores the implications for administrative law, torts, and other areas.

Important note for GULC faculty: there will be no evaluation form of any kind that you'll need to fill out after this talk.

As usual, we'll meet at noon in Hotung 2001. The paper is attached.

For Hillary Clinton, 2008 provides little help for 2016 (USAT)

By Martha T. Moore

February 3, 2015

USA Today

As she maps out a possible presidential campaign, Hillary Rodham Clinton has had plenty of time to think about what she should do differently than during her 2008 bid. A far greater influence on a Clinton 2016 run, however, will be the far-reaching changes in the political landscape.

In 2008, Clinton's bid for the Democratic nomination foundered because of infighting among her staff and her own less-than-compelling campaign style. Facing a primary opponent who would go on to become the first African-American elected president, she did not emphasize the history-making potential of a female candidate until she conceded the nomination to Barack Obama.

Initially favored to win the nomination, the 2008 Clinton publicly predicted the Democratic primary would be over quickly, by early February. But she blew the Iowa caucus, spending heavily but coming in third. Obama's campaign capitalized on its skill at grass-roots mobilizing, and Clinton's relative weakness, to win 10 further caucuses to Clinton's two.

And Clinton looked ungracious, at best, when former president Bill Clinton compared Obama's South Carolina primary victory to that of Jesse Jackson, the African-American candidate who won the state in the 1980s. She presented herself as an experienced veteran to Democratic voters who, it turned out, wanted something and someone new.

If Clinton runs in 2016, voters will again have the opportunity to make a historic choice: She would almost certainly be the only female candidate. But Clinton can count on little else resembling her first campaign.

"Things are totally different. There's not an incumbent Republican president, the technology and the (issues) that were driving 2004 and 2008, that's completely changed as well," says Joe Trippi, the Democratic strategist. "The one thing I think that stays is a distrust for authority and the status quo."

If Clinton goes forward, it will be over new terrain:

The tactics

In January 2007, when Clinton announced her exploratory committee, in a video on her website, the iPhone did not yet exist. Social media meant largely Facebook, and digital targeting of voters was just developing. A Clinton 2016 campaign would have to communicate through myriad social media platforms and apps, and reach voters online with e-mail and ads targeted through data analytics.

"Even between the four years in which Obama ran for president, the ways in which voters consumed information changed in a significant way," says Ben LaBolt, who served as press secretary for Obama's 2012 campaign. "Having a strategy to reach people where they are is essential."

As secretary of State, Clinton embraced social media, not only as an image enhancer but as a tool of diplomacy. "What she was doing over at the State Department was light-years ahead of where her campaign had been," Trippi says.

The money

Clinton isn't likely to have trouble raising contributions for a second campaign, but the dynamics have been radically altered since her last run. The 2010 Citizens United decision by the Supreme Court unleashed unlimited outside expenditures by independent groups that don't always have to reveal their donors. Outside spending on presidential runs nearly tripled between 2008 and 2012, from $231 million to $653 million.

The 2016 election will see even higher totals: For instance, the conservative Republican network funded by brothers Charles and David Koch has announced it will spend as much as $889 million in advance of the next election.

There are outside groups in place to support a Clinton candidacy: Priorities USA Action, run by Obama alumni, to raise money, and Ready for Hillary, which is building a volunteer and supporter database with the help of 270 Strategies, a digital analytics firm also run by Obama veterans.

The candidate

Clinton was a popular secretary of State: Her approval rating rose to over 60% in 2011. Now that she appears to be edging toward another presidential run, polls show her favorable rating at 46% and her unfavorable at 45%. But the diplomatic timeout from politics may have lessened the "Clinton fatigue" of the 2008 campaign, when voters wondered whether they were ready for another Clinton administration. By 2016, no one under 38 will have cast a ballot for Bill Clinton.

In 2008, Hillary Clinton ran to succeed an unpopular Republican two-term president. Next year, she would be trying to succeed a president of her own party. It's a difficult task: In the past 60 years, only George H.W. Bush has done it, credited in part to President Reagan's high approval ratings.

Voters get tired of having the same party in the White House, and Obama is unlikely to be sufficiently popular to give Clinton a boost, says Chris Lehane, a Democratic strategist. "The (Democratic) fatigue factor will exist. But you will also have an improving economy in a time when people 'get' we have some major issues that need to be addressed."

Clinton has already made clear she has disagreed with Obama. . "She'll no doubt draw some distinctions with the president. To not upset the base of the party, those will have to be carefully chosen moments," LaBolt says.

The big issue

Much of Clinton's campaign against Obama focused on the Iraq War, her level of political experience and whether people should be required to buy health insurance. (At that time, Obama said no.) When the financial crisis blew up in September 2008, Clinton was no longer running. But the economic consequences of that crisis, and its effect on Americans, would inescapably be a top issue of her 2016 campaign.

Since she left the State Department, Clinton has spoken on all kinds of issues. But McIntosh says there's an underlying theme that's the right one for 2016: "There's not a public speech that goes by where she doesn't talk about how we move forward by improving the lives of women and families. She should keep talking about that," McIntosh says.

Voters want to know "how Americans can make sure they -- and, in particular, their kids -- will get a fair shake in getting their piece of the economic pie," Lehane says.

Perhaps Clinton's biggest task is to show voters she knows how long ago 2008 was.

"It's taking all that experience she had, and then not getting dragged down into the same old debate. Putting forth some new policies and mapping out for the American people where she wants to take us," Trippi says. "Playing it safe, being predictable -- those are all her enemies."

Hillary Clinton eyes New York City campaign headquarters (MSNBC)

By Alex Seitz-Wald

February 2, 2015

MSNBC

If Hillary Clinton decides to run for president, her campaign is likely to be headquartered in New York City, as opposed to the suburbs where advisers had previously planned, three sources familiar with Clinton's planning told msnbc.

Choosing a new home base is a key item on former secretary of state's to-do list as she prepares for an almost certain 2016 presidential campaign launch, which could come as early as April. Her small personal staff moved to new offices in midtown Manhattan in August, but the space is far too small to accommodate the massive operation needed for a presidential campaign.

While Clinton and her advisers had previously eyed the Westchester County city of White Plains, about 25 miles north of Manhattan, Clinton has now more or less decided on a location in New York City, likely either Brooklyn or Queens, according to three knowledgeable Democrats, who spoke on the condition of anonymity since they were not authorized to discuss the matter with the press.

A base in gentrifying Brooklyn or Queens could help give Clinton's campaign a youthful feel, and would likely be a relief for Democratic operatives dreading a relocation to the suburb, or a daily commute from New York City. White Plains is about an hour from Manhattan by public transit.

"White Plains is not conducive for the mainly younger generation of political staff that is going to make up the majority of her headquarters," said one Democrat familiar with the planning discussions. A more central location "will be more inviting for the long hours a campaign will expect of them."

And while White Plains is a middle-class city, some Democrats worried about the optics of Clinton putting her main office in the affluent Westchester County, as the choice could contribute to the narrative that Clinton is out of touch. The former secretary of state and her husband, former president Bill Clinton, have a home in nearby Chappaqua, which has become a locus of campaign planning.

One thing Clinton and her advisers have been dead set against is headquartering her campaign in Washington, D.C., again. Her 2008 presidential campaign was based in a former Immigration and Naturalization Services building in a suburb of the capital, and being so close to the heart of the political-media industry was corrosive, former staffers say. Meanwhile, Obama campaign veterans say their outside-the-beltway Chicago location was a boon.

Brooklyn is one of four finalists to host the Democratic National Convention in 2016, and Clinton is close with New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, who managed her 2000 Senate campaign.

A Clinton spokesperson did not respond to a request for comment.

Hillary eyes Brooklyn for campaign HQ (Hill)

By Amie Parnes

February 2, 2015

The Hill

Hillary Clinton is focused on housing her 2016 campaign headquarters in New York City — potentially in Brooklyn, which has emerged as a leading contender.

Insiders say Clinton aides are looking at Brooklyn as a possible location, and that an office in White Plains, near the Clinton's Chappaqua, N.Y., home, has been all but ruled out.

For months, some in the Clinton universe thought that setting up the campaign in or around White Plains, a middle-class enclave with dozens of office parks, would be a good home for the former secretary of State's second presidential campaign.

But using Brooklyn for its headquarters could be a useful symbol for a campaign that hopes to win over young people and has already been attacked by Republicans as "old news."

The borough is New York City's most populous, and has had a renaissance over the last decade as many of its neighborhoods have been transformed. It is also one of the most ethnically diverse areas of the United States — another aspect Clinton's team will want to highlight as it seeks to attract minority voters.

It would provide a stark contrast from the locale where Clinton based her 2008 presidential campaign: the Washington, D.C., suburb of Ballston, Va. Back then, Team Clinton was housed in a stodgy former Immigration and Naturalization Service building.

The former first lady has a personal office in midtown Manhattan, separate from the office space in midtown she has at the Clinton Foundation, where she has worked since leaving the State Department in 2013. Her husband, former President Bill Clinton, also has a personal office in Harlem.

Clinton is currently huddling with a small team of aides to craft plans for the 2016 campaign, including a potential start date for her bid.

The would-be presidential campaign contender hasn't yet reached a consensus on when exactly she'll enter the race, but some insiders say it's looking more and more likely that she'll do a pre-launch in April to "get things going," as one put it.

Aides are still examining a formal start date in July, but a pre-launch could be spent fundraising and building out the campaign staff, some Clinton allies say.

The allies say a soft rollout makes sense for Clinton because it would be difficult for her to remain on the sidelines for the next five months. Taking an initial and informal step, which wouldn't have to be accompanied by the traditional bells and whistles, would bring a sense of closure to the will-she-or-won't-she phase while giving her some breathing room to prepare for the next steps on both the policy and politics fronts.

"I think the preference would be to wait longer so that she's not firing on all cylinders until July," one ally said. "I think that time would be used to continue making a lot of decisions with less time on the road. That piece of it wouldn't really come until 3rd quarter."

Ready for Hillary, the super-PAC created to lure Clinton into the race two years ago, will begin to shut down as soon as Clinton forms any kind of exploratory committee or pre-launch. Donors to the political action committee have been told in private conversations that the outside organization would not compete with Clinton for money and would start to wrap up work as soon as she indicated she would be entering the race.

EMILY's List to honor Hillary Clinton (AP)

By Ken Thomas

February 3, 2015

Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton will be honored next month by EMILY's List, a Democratic fundraising powerhouse, as she considers a potential 2016 presidential campaign that could make her the first woman to win the White House.

EMILY's List, which works to elect Democratic women who support abortion rights, said Tuesday that Clinton would appear at its 30th anniversary awards gala in Washington on March 3. The former secretary of state will receive the group's We Are EMILY Award to honor her leadership "as a fighter for women and families," said Stephanie Schriock, the group's president.

Schriock said Clinton has "dedicated her life to bettering the lives of women and families and has inspired the next generation with a focus on increasing economic empowerment across the country and around the world."

The political action committee has been among the Democratic groups laying the groundwork for a Clinton campaign, holding events promoting the idea of electing the nation's first female president and commissioning polling on U.S. interest in sending a woman to the White House. Schriock, who has been mentioned as a potential senior campaign aide for Clinton, noted that the group has backed Clinton since her 2000 Senate election in New York.

Clinton is the leading Democratic contender for the White House and is widely expected to announce another presidential campaign in the coming months.

The group will also honor former Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, D-Ariz., for her "commitment to community" and dedication to women and families. Giffords was gravely wounded in a 2011 shooting during a political event she held at a Tucson, Arizona, shopping center. Six people were killed and 13 were injured, including Giffords.

Hillary Clinton to headline March event for PAC aimed at electing women (CNN)

By Dan Merica

February 3, 2015

CNN

Washington (CNN)Emily's List, a pro-Clinton super PAC focused on electing pro-choice women, will honor Hillary Clinton at their 30th anniversary gala on March 3 in Washington, D.C.

The former secretary of state -- who is widely considered the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination -- will receive an award honoring her leadership "as a fighter for women and families" and will deliver a keynote speech at the event, CNN confirmed Tuesday. The Associated Press first reported the story.

"Hillary Clinton has dedicated her life to bettering the lives of women and families and has inspired the next generation with a focus on increasing economic empowerment across the country and around the world," Stephanie Schriock, President of EMILY's List, said in a statement. "EMILY's List and our members have been proud to support her since her election to the United States Senate in 2000, her subsequent campaigns, and throughout her tenure as Secretary of State."

A number of outside groups have spent the last year organizing around an all-but-certain Clinton run. Joined by groups like Ready for Hillary and American Bridge, Emily's List has helped lay groundwork for the former first lady and senator of New York.

The group has raised money off the idea of electing a women president, organized events through their "Madam President" campaign and commissioned polling about electing a women to the White House.

Poll: Clinton sweeps GOP foes save Bush tie in Florida (CNN)

By Jeremy Diamond

February 3, 2015

CNN

Washington (CNN)Hillary Clinton is leading top Republican contenders in three crucial swing states by hefty margins, but she has two scenarios where she could be evenly matched, according to a new poll.

Clinton has double digit leads over each of her would-be GOP foes for the presidency in Florida, Ohio and Pennsylvania, with the exception of ties in Florida when matched up against the state's former Gov. Jeb Bush and in Ohio against current Gov. John Kasich, according to a Quinnipiac University poll released Tuesday. No candidate has won the presidency since 1960 without winning two of those three crucial states.

Other native sons didn't fare as well against the former secretary of state, with Clinton still topping Florida's Sen. Marco Rubio 49% to 39% and also leading Pennsylvania's former Sen. Rick Santorum by 10 points in his state.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie flopped to Clinton by double digits in each of the three states, according to the poll, including in neighboring Pennsylvania where he caps at 39% to Clinton's 50%, according to the Quinnipiac survey of 881 voters in that state.

Clinton's lead in the polls also match her favorability ratings, which topped 50 percent according to Quinnipiac polling in all three states.

And the former first lady also owes some of her success to her appeal to women voters who gave Clinton an edge in every theoretical match-up. Even in Florida where she ties Bush, Clinton still wins over the female vote by an 11-point margin.

With 2012 Republican presidential nominee Mitt Romney opting out of the presidential race after spending three weeks leaning toward a third run, the GOP establishment has been looking toward Bush as the party's standard-bearer.

But the son and brother to two former presidents will have to overcome struggles with voters in Ohio and Pennsylvania, where he trailed Clinton by 11 and 15 points, respectively, according to the Quinnipiac survey of more than 900 voters in each state.

Christie, who is also ramping up his political operation and trying to seize on the vacuum of donors freed up by Romney, faces 11- to 18-point deficits against Clinton in the three swing states.

Other candidates offered up as the Republican alternative to a Clinton presidency include former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, a social conservative who loses to Clinton by at 15 to 20 points in the three states. Huckabee also sought the Republican nomination in 2008.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky, who represents the libertarian wing of his party, also faces at least a 12-point deficit against Clinton in the swing states.

The poll is still a very early indicator of the race and Clinton, a former first lady and secretary of state, continues to enjoy a higher profile than the potential Republican candidates.

Hillary Clinton and Jeb Bush tied in Florida; Clinton leads Marco Rubio (Sun Sentinel)

Sun Sentinel

A new poll of the big states with the most influence in picking the next president shows Florida would be a closely fought battleground if Jeb Bush and Hillary Clinton are the Republican and Democratic presidential nominees in 2012.

Florida is a dead heat between Bush and Clinton. She is 10 points ahead of Marco Rubio.

The Quinnipiac University Poll released Tuesday showed Democrat Clinton with 44 percent and Republican Bush with 33 percent. In another hypothetical matchup, Clinton has 49 percent to 39 percent for Rubio, Florida's Republican U.S. senator.

The presidential election is 21 months away, and polling this far in advance largely shows name recognition among voters. The candidates who scored best among Florida voters are the names they're most familiar with: Clinton, the former first lady, former U.S. senator and former secretary of state, and Bush, the former Florida governor and son and brother of two other Bush presidents.

It's a similar pattern in the other two big swing states in which Quinnipiac polled: Ohio, where Gov. John Kasich tied Clinton, and Pennsylvania, where Chris Christie, the governor of neighboring state New Jersey performed better than any of the other Republicans polled.

Unlike Florida, Clinton significantly outpolled Bush and Christie in those other two states.

Florida, though, is the biggest prize in the 2016 presidential election because it's the largest state that could go for either party, awarding 29 electoral votes, more than 10 percent of the total needed to win the presidency.

Given Bush's showing, Peter Brown, assistant director of the Quinnipiac Poll, said Florida was Clinton's "worst state among the three."

OTHER CANDIDATES: While Clinton is tied with Bush in Florida, she is far ahead of the other potential Republican candidates, including 51 percent to 33 percent over Christie, 50 percent to 38 percent over U.S. Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky, and 51 percent to 34 percent over former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee.

GENDER: Florida women favor Clinton over Bush 50 percent to 41 percent. Men favor Bush 45 percent to 37 percent. Clinton does even better among women when paired against the other possible Republican candidates.

FAVORABILITY: Clinton is viewed positively by 53 percent of Florida voters and negatively by 39 percent. Bush is viewed positively by 46 percent and negatively by 38 percent. Rubio is tied with 36 percent positive and negative. Candidates who aren't as well known have lower positive and lower negative numbers: 30 percent to 25 percent for Paul and tied at 31 percent for Huckabee.

Quinnipiac University used land lines and cell phones to interview 936 Florida voters from Jan 22 to Feb 1. The survey has a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Quinnipiac didn't ask Ohio and Pennsylvania voters about Rubio, instead asking about their states' favorite sons, Kasich and former Pennsylvania U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum.

The poll started before the unsuccessful 2012 Republican nominee, Mitt Romney said he wouldn't seek the presidency a third time. In a head to head matchup, Florida voters supported Clinton over Romney 50 to 37 percent.

Hillary Clinton would run the table in Ohio -- except in a race with Gov. John Kasich, new poll finds (Cleveland Plain Dealer)

By Henry Gomez

February 3, 2015

Cleveland Plain Dealers

CLEVELAND, Ohio -- Hillary Clinton, the former U.S. secretary of state and Democratic presidential frontrunner, has early, double-digit leads in Ohio over some of the top-tier Republican prospects, a new Quinnipiac University poll shows.

But add Ohio Gov. John Kasich to the mix, and the contest narrows to a dead heat.

If the 2016 general election were held today, 44 percent of Ohio voters would back Clinton, while 43 percent would back Kasich -- a statistical tie given the poll's 3.2 percent margin of error. Quinnipiac, one of nation's leading independent pollsters, surveyed 943 Buckeye State voters from Jan. 22 through Feb. 1.

Kasich won re-election by a wide margin last fall against a weak Democratic rival.

"Kasich scored his big victory," observed Peter A. Brown, the Quinnipiac Poll's assistant director, "by cutting into the traditional Democratic edge in a number of areas -- women, blue-collar workers and taking a big share of the independent vote."

The second-term governor has done little to prepare for a presidential campaign but has acknowledged in recent weeks that he is interested. National polls, and one last week in the important first-caucus state of Iowa, show Kasich far behind.

After Kasich, Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor who is seen as the GOP establishment's frontrunner of the moment, would give Clinton the toughest race -- and she leads him 47 percent to 36 percent, the poll shows.

Other prospective contests:

Clinton - 48 percent, Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky - 36 percent.

Clinton - 47 percent, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie - 34 percent.

Clinton - 49 percent, Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee - 34 percent.

Clinton also was polled against Mitt Romney, who announced Friday that he would not run again. Ohio voters favor her over the former Massachusetts governor and 2012 GOP nominee by a spread of 49 percent to 37 percent.

Other Ohio findings:

51 percent of voters view Clinton favorably, 40 percent unfavorably.

43 percent view Kasich favorably, 29 percent unfavorably and, even though he just won re-election, 27 percent "haven't heard enough."

After Clinton and Kasich, no prospective candidate has a positive favorable rating and all remain largely unknown to Ohio's electorate.

Quinnipiac surveyed voters in two other presidential battlegrounds: Florida and Pennsylvania. Pollsters did not ask about Kasich there, but did include native sons Marco Rubio in Florida and Rick Santorum in Pennsylvania.

The only other close race brewing is in Florida, where Clinton also is in a statistical tie with Bush -- 44 percent for Clinton to 43 percent to Bush.

Clinton leads in Florida:

51 - 33 percent over Christie.

50 - 38 percent over Paul.

51 - 34 percent over Huckabee.

49 - 39 percent over Rubio.

And in Pennsylvania:

50 - 35 percent over Bush.

50 - 39 percent over Christie.

53 - 34 percent over Paul.

54 - 34 percent over Huckabee.

54 - 34 percent over Santorum.

"While would-be Republican presidential candidates -- even Native Son Rick Santorum, absorb less than stellar favorability numbers -- Clinton has the closest thing to rock star ratings a politician can get in America today," said Quinnipiac's Tim Malloy. "Pennsylvania, which just elected a Democratic governor, is shaping up early in the campaign season as the bluest of the swing states."

Ready for Hillary PAC Raised Nearly $9 Million in 2014 (WSJ)

By Rebecca Ballhaus

February 2, 2015

The Wall Street Journal

Ready for Hillary, a super PAC formed in 2013 to raise money for a presidential campaign by Hillary Clinton, raised nearly $9 million in 2014, more than twice as much as the previous year and more than the groups affiliated with most Republicans known to be considering a 2016 presidential bid.

The Ready for Hillary group is not directly affiliated with Mrs. Clinton, but is collecting names and email addresses of her supporters that it will make available to her campaign should she decide to run. It has ramped up its fundraising operation in the last year, hosting events featuring top officials from the administration of former President Bill Clinton. Its national finance council—which requires members to give or raise at least $25,000 each—now has more than 894 members, according to a spokesman for the group. And though the group would be barred from coordinating with Mrs. Clinton’s campaign should she decide to run, its fundraising success indicates the pull Mrs. Clinton’s name would have among donors.

Ready for Hillary’s fundraising numbers were disclosed in a Federal Election Commission report Saturday evening, the deadline to file year-end reports for all political-action committees and campaign committees. Also required to file were the leadership PACs affiliated with several potential 2016 candidates, including Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, both Republicans.

Though money raised through leadership PACs can be used only for non-campaign-related expenses, such as travel, or to give to other candidates, the groups can often provide a good test of potential candidates’ fundraising prowess. Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, for instance, launched a PAC last month along with a fundraising initiative his team dubbed a “shock and awe” campaign—an effort to raise enough money to give other Republicans second thoughts about entering the race.

Of the PACs affiliated with a potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate, the only one that raised more than Ready for Hillary was a super PAC backing Ben Carson, a retired neurosurgeon, which raised a formidable $12 million in 2014 and spent nearly that amount. But Mr. Carson, who has a campaign-in-waiting, has distanced himself from the group amid questions about how it has spent its money. USA First PAC, a committee that is affiliated with Mr. Carson, raised around $430,000 in 2014.

Mr. Paul and Mr. Huckabee saw their leadership PACs raise the most in 2014 of other groups affiliated with potential 2016 GOP presidential candidates. Mr. Paul’s leadership PAC, Reinventing a New Direction, brought in more than $2.1 million, while Mr. Huckabee’s raised just shy of $1.9 million.

Both groups also spent much of what they raised. In 2013 and 2014, Mr. Paul’s PAC spent at least $1.7 million on fundraising expenses, including consulting fees, events, and mailings, according to the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics. It also spent around $500,000 on staffers’ salaries, as Mr. Paul builds up his operation for a potential 2016 bid. On Thursday, Texas GOP Chairman Steve Munisteri announced he would join Mr. Paul’s team of advisers in March.

Mr. Huckabee’s group, called Huck PAC, gave nearly $1 million to House and Senate candidates’ campaigns in the 2014 election cycle. It also spent around $1 million on fundraising.

Other Republicans whose leadership PACs raised substantial sums last year include Texas Sen. Ted Cruz, Florida Sen. Marco Rubio and former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum.

Mr. Cruz’s group raised $1.7 million in 2014, and had about $130,000 in the bank as of Dec. 31, 2014. Mr. Rubio’s group raised $1.6 million, and had $30,000 on hand at yearend. Mr. Santorum’s PAC raised nearly $1.6 million.

Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry’s leadership PAC, which just started raising money in July 2014, has raised around $300,000 since then. Mr. Perry, a Republican, is currently facing an indictment on two felony charges for allegedly improperly threatening to veto funding for a prosecutorial unit if the prosecutor didn’t resign following a drunken-driving arrest, which could complicate his prospects for another presidential bid.

The leadership PAC for Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, a Republican who is also considering a presidential campaign, raised around $275,000. Supporters of the governor last week filed paperwork for a super PAC called Believe Again, and Mr. Jindal last week changed the name of his PAC to match that of the super PAC, according to a spokesman.

Fundraising on the Democratic side was considerably weaker, a sign of Mrs. Clinton’s strong support. Some Democrats fear her early dominance will deprive the party of a competitive primary in which candidates could refine their stances and skills for the general election. The leadership PAC for former Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley, who has said he is considering a 2016 bid, raised around $750,000 in 2014. It does have considerably more in the bank than most of the other leadership PACs—nearly $600,000.

Progressive Voters of America, the leadership PAC for Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, an independent, raised around $200,000. Mr. Sanders, who has won some support from the progressive wing of the Democratic Party, has said he is considering a campaign and wants to test whether he can raise enough money.

O'Malley looks to capitalize on Clinton's absence from Iowa (Des Moines Register)

By Jennifer Jacobs

February 2, 2015

The Des Moines Register

As some Iowa Democratic activists voice frustration with the “arrogance” of Hillary Clinton, liberal rival Martin O'Malley intends to seize on her absence from Iowa and the presidential race.

There's just a tiny seed of support here for O'Malley right now. The lead singer/guitarist in a Baltimore-based Irish folk-rock band and the recent-past governor of Maryland ranks dead last in a Democratic field of six potential contenders, the new Iowa Poll shows.

But O'Malley, who has pitched himself as a results-driven progressive, wants to see if he can build on support for a White House bid during two upcoming trips here – one in March and one in April, aides told The Des Moines Register Monday.

Iowans said this is a prime time for an alternative contender to make some headway, as vexation with Clinton bubbles to the surface in the wake of news reports that she may delay the timetable again for her presumed campaign.

“I honestly don't know who I'll caucus for in 2016, but I do know that if she wants my support she'll need to be here organizing like any other candidate,” Heather Matson, a member of the Iowa Democrats' state central committee, wrote on Facebook last week. “All this says to me is that her advisers think it's a good idea to keep the mystery going to avoid competition. Get in the game or don't. But don't leave Iowa Democrats without options and undermine the value of the caucuses.”

It's a “terrible idea” for Clinton to put off a campaign until summertime just because she foresees no major challenge for the Democratic presidential nomination, agreed former state Rep. Phil Wise.

“(It) would indicate a total lack of understanding of recent political history,” Wise wrote on Facebook.

“Arrogance will cost her,” Des Moines activist Nancy Bobo, founder of Women for a Stronger America and a strong early supporter of Barack Obama, wrote in response to Wise and Matson.

For his upcoming Iowa trip, O'Malley will speak on Friday, March 20 at the Scott County Democratic Party's “Red, White and Blue Dinner,” according to Lis Smith, spokeswoman for O'Malley's political action committee, O'Say Can You See PAC. The social hour begins at 6 p.m. and the dinner and program at 7 p.m. at the Clarion Hotel, 5202 Brady St. in Davenport.

He will also be in Des Moines on Friday, April 10 for the Polk County Democrats' fourth-annual Spring Awards Dinner, Smith told the Register. The dinner begins at 5 p.m. at the UAW Local 450 building at 4589 NW 6th Dr. in Des Moines. He has booked trips to two other early states as well – South Carolina at the end of February and New Hampshire in March.

For O'Malley, there's nowhere to go but up in Iowa, his supporters say. The new Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll shows Clinton, a former U.S. secretary of state who made two trips to Iowa last year, would dominate the field in Iowa if she runs. While Clinton enjoys nearly universal recognition, likely Democratic caucusgoers don't know enough about O'Malley to even to form an opinion.

Two other bottom-tier contenders on the Democratic side – U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, a liberal independent; and former U.S. Sen. Jim Webb of Virginia – both have limited appeal while O'Malley can spend a lot of time in Iowa and has a lot of growth potential, his backers say. O'Malley wrote an opinion piece for today's New York Times that goes after the Obama administration for off-shore drilling on the Atlantic Coast.

Last year, O'Malley flew to Iowa for a couple of high-profile events – speeches to several hundred Democrats at the Iowa Hall of Fame Dinner and the Iowa Democratic Party Convention in June. Although O'Malley remains relatively unknown to rank-and-file Democratic caucusgoers, he cached a reservoir of goodwill with Iowa's most hardcore activists by doing two dozen events here last year, campaigning and fundraising for state and federal candidates during the midterm elections.

O'Malley did 11 fundraisers for eight Democratic candidates in Iowa. He did five events for gubernatorial candidate Jack Hatch, who lost his race, as did U.S. House candidate Jim Mowrer, Secretary of State competitor Brad Anderson, U.S. Senate candidate Bruce Braley and Iowa Senate candidate Steve Siegel. Three other candidates for whom he did fundraisers – incumbent U.S. Rep. Dave Loebsack, and Iowa Senate candidates Rita Hart and Kevin Kinney – won their elections.

Altogether, O'Malley's PAC gave $46,000 to Iowa candidates and two party organizations, the Pottawattamie County Democrats and the Iowa Democratic Party, PAC records show. O'Malley deployed one of his PAC staffers, Brad Elkins, to Iowa in September to serve as Hatch's political director, and in mid-December retained Jake Oeth, who was Braley's political director, as his Iowa consultant.

And O'Malley did 23 events in Iowa between June and the November election.

Top Iowa activists said Democrats are hungry for that kind of action, especially as 16 or so GOP potential candidates blanket the state and draw national headlines at events like U.S. Rep. Steve King's Iowa Freedom Summit.

“Hillary is NOT a shoe in when it comes to Iowa caucuses,” Kim Weaver, chairwoman of the O'Brien County Democrats and a member of the Iowa Democrats' state central committee, wrote on Facebook. “If she thinks so, it will be a mistake she lives to regret – just my opinion anyway.”

Weaver was writing in response to a story Wednesday on Slate.com on “why Hillary Clinton needs to fight hard for Iowa” and a report Thursday in Politico that Clinton is “strongly considering delaying the formal launch of her presidential campaign until July.”

Weaver, who is neutral in the 2016 caucuses for now, added: “In the recent election we saw how getting a nod from the traditional guard doesn’t assure a win among the rank and file. In my not so always humble opinion, Hillary needs to court Iowans and show us that she isn’t gong to take us for granted.”

The draft-Clinton super PAC Ready for Hillary is doing a 99-county tour in Iowa, but that’s not enough, the activists said.

“Ready for Hillary can be doing all the events they want, but until the candidate herself is in the state shaking hands at small events and having those personal conversations with Iowans, it doesn’t translate to solid support,” Matson wrote.

Former state Rep. Elesha Gayman Shahinllari responded to those comments: “I love how everyone says she’s inevitable – apparently they forgot 2008.”

Clinton, who was last in Iowa before the fall elections, is currently the first choice for 56 percent of likely caucusgoers. Massachusetts U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren gets 16 percent support. Vice President Joe Biden is at 9 percent. Sanders is at 5 percent, and Webb is at 3 percent.

O’Malley rings in at 1 percent, while another 3 percent say he’s their second choice.

The lesson for Hillary Clinton in Mitt Romney's decision (Washington Times)

By Joseph Curl
February 2, 2015
Washington Times

There's a wonderful scene in "Citizen Kane" in which the intrepid young reporter Jerry Thompson, in search of just what the dying word "Rosebud" meant, tracks down Charles Foster Kane's best friend. Jedediah Leland is an old man now, living in a rundown retirement home in the Bronx. Frail, maybe a bit senile, Jedediah delivers a dramatic insight into Charlie.

"He married for love — that's why he did everything. That's why he went into politics. It seems we weren't enough. He wanted all the voters to love him, too. Guess all he really wanted out of life was love. That's Charlie's story, how he lost it. You see, he just didn't have any to give. Well, he loved Charlie Kane of course, very dearly," Jed said.

There's something odd about the men (and women) who run for president. First, it is the height of hubris to think that you — of the 320 million people in America — are the sole citizen who can lead America. But that's what each presidential candidate really thinks: I alone am qualified to lead the most powerful nation in the world.

Second, those who run for president all seem to have enormous flaws (think quick: Don't you know someone in your immediate circle who would be a better president than the last few we've had?). For President Obama, it's his spectacular arrogance. Only his viewpoint is right, damn the other half of America that thinks differently.

And third, they all seem to be lacking something. In Charlie Kane's case, it was love. But for many who go into politics, the story is the same. Bill Clinton, abandoned by his father, sought the love of everyone (and spent quite a bit of time seeking the love of various women who were not his wife). He was always missing a piece.

There are some who say George W. Bush, a longtime washout, a family disappointment, entered politics in search of the love of his father — and even followed him into the presidency, where still others say he went to war with Iraq to finish the job his father started.

Mitt Romney is also such a man. A wonderfully nice human being, Mr. Romney is lacking — something. It's not money: He's worth a cool quarter-billion dollars (he made nearly $14 million the year he was running for president by doing nothing). And very rich men often grow bored and seek the one thing they can't buy — power (think people like Ross Perot and Donald Trump).

Of course, picking a president isn't about love, but rather competence. Americans in 2008 and 2012, when Mr. Romney lost, just thought Mr. Obama was the better man for the job. But it no doubt feels like a massive rebuke to lose the presidential election. It must be hard to think "They just don't like me."

Mr. Romney, like most election losers, wandered off into the wilderness (remember how Al Gore got fat, grew a beard and disappeared for months?).

But then, like many a flawed man before him, Mr. Romney re-emerged, declaring his desire to run again. Even though he suffered a self-inflicted drubbing (the "47 percent" comment killed him), the 67-year-old thought he could actually win in 2016.

The party elders (and especially the moneymen) convinced him otherwise. And Mr. Romney himself described what should come next: "I believe that one of our next generation of Republican leaders, one who may not be as well known as I am today, one who has not yet taken their message across the country, one who is just getting started, may well emerge as being better able to defeat the Democrat nominee."

So, too, is it for Hillary Rodham Clinton. Like Mr. Romney, she has run — and lost. America rejected her in 2008, picking a first-term senator instead. She likely will run — her hubris knows no bounds — but she should heed the lesson Mr. Romney learned.

She, like Mr. Romney, is 67. And her ideas, like Mr. Romney's, are simply from the past. More, she is painfully flawed. Rather than retire, bask in grandmothering daughter Chelsea's new baby, Hillary wants to win the love of all America — so badly she'll risk everything. The most successful first lady in history — senator, Secretary of State — she needs more, more, more.

But like Mr. Romney, she's about to learn a hard lesson. If she runs in 2016, she will lose. Then, unlike Mr. Romney, she'll be a two-time loser. And she'll be consigned to the dustbin of history — where she'll belong.

Elizabeth Warren Supporters: Hillary Clinton Is “Republican Lite” and “Completely Unacceptable” (New Republic)

By Claire Groden

February 2, 2015

New Republic

Elizabeth Warren wants you to know that she really isn't planning to run for president. She said so in an interview with NPR's Steve Inskeep last month, when she repeated at least four times, "I am not running for president." She told the same thing to The Washington Post's Ruth Marcus: "I am not running. I think I am being definitive." And when Fortune asked her in January: "No."

Her supporters are not convinced. In a promotional video for Run Warren Run, a group dedicated to getting Warren on the 2016 presidential ballot, the senator is shown being asked the same question—but the scene cuts before she can answer the usual no. This Sunday, just hours before the Super Bowl, more than 20 people trickled into a windowless basement room of Washington, D.C.'s Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Library. Like more than 200 other meetings that convened across the country through Run Warren Run, the group strategized how to convince the Massachusetts senator to say yes.

"I've heard questions before, like, 'I heard that she's not running,'" one of the organizers, who asked to go only by his first name, Carl, said. "But they all say they're not going to run before they run." For many in the room, it's Warren's hesitance to self-promote that has won her so much respect.

Though the organizers asked participants to avoid trash-talking Clinton, Carl opened the meeting by calling for more than "a coronation" in the Democratic primary. Participants said that the sense of Clinton's inevitability was a threat to the democratic process, and described Clinton as "Republican lite," "in the pocket of big business," and "completely unacceptable." Zephyr Williams, a graduate student at American University, explained her wariness with establishment politicians. "I can imagine it's difficult to avoid selling out when you've been in politics for as long as Hillary has," she said, underlining what many in the group saw as Warren's key strength as an outsider to politics. Others criticized Clinton for her hawkish foreign policy and support amongst Wall Street bankers.

Participants praised Warren as a "fighter" for the middle class, waging war against Wall Street even at the expense of her own party. Many progressives cheered for Warren when she scuttled President Obama's renomination of former Lazard banker Antonio Weiss to a top Treasury Department post. Warren's bill to help students refinance their loans, which was blocked in the Senate in September, also placed her on the radar screens of many young Democrats. Part of the Run Warren Run's strategy is to raise awareness of the senator, since many voters aren't as familiar with Warren as they are with Clinton. "To know Elizabeth Warren is to love her," said one meeting attendee.

So far, polls have shown Clinton far outpacing any other Democratic challengers in the polls, and Politico reported that the frontrunner is considering delaying her campaign, since her campaign sees no serious contender in the ranks. But in September, a WSJ/NBC poll found that only 43 percent of voters viewed Clinton favorably, compared to 41 percent who had negative views. In the Run Warren Run meeting, a retired teacher named Jeanne Castro said that she felt torn between voting for Clinton and Obama in the 2008 presidential primary. Castro wanted to vote for Clinton because she wanted to see a woman in the White House, but "Hillary never moved me," she said. "Warren, she touched me."

In a November poll conducted by the progressive organization Democracy for America, Warren emerged as the favored candidate with 42 percent, beating out Clinton by 19 percentage points. But among those who showed up for the Run Warren Run event, a few said they still expected Clinton to win. Would they vote for Clinton if Warren doesn't run? Tom Hunter, a 59-year-old on long-term disability, chuckled. "Yeah, of course I would vote for Hillary."

Hillary Clinton to Be Inducted Into Irish-American Hall of Fame (NYT)

By Amy Chozick

February 2, 2015

The New York Times

Hillary Rodham Clinton will be inducted into Irish America magazine's hall of fame next month, giving her an early opportunity to try to charm a critical voting bloc.

On March 16, Mrs. Clinton will deliver a keynote address to a network of high-profile Irish-Americans who each year honor elected officials and others and give them a chance to address the St. Patrick's Day-themed luncheon.

Previous inductees include former President Bill Clinton, Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. and former Gov. Martin O'Malley or Maryland, who last year addressed the crowd in a mix of English and Irish.

Mrs. Clinton traveled frequently to Ireland as first lady and as secretary of state, and often talks about the end of the civil strife known as the Troubles as a crowning foreign policy achievement of her husband's administration. She last visited Belfast in 2012 when she pledged to continue to support peace in Ireland in whatever way she could.

"Hillary Rodham Clinton is one of the unsung heroes of the success of the Irish peace process," said Niall O'Dowd, publisher of Irish America magazine.

As a result, Mrs. Clinton has enjoyed broad support among Irish-Catholic voters in battleground states like Pennsylvania and Ohio, where the white working class can sway elections. During her 2008 presidential campaign, Mrs. Clinton marched in the St. Patrick's Day parade in Scranton, Pa., where her father was born.

Underscoring the importance of Irish-American voters, the hall of fame luncheon, held in Manhattan, will be one of Mrs. Clinton's only public commitments as she keeps a relatively low profile before her anticipated 2016 presidential campaign announcement.

Hillary Clinton Libya tapes set for House Benghazi committee review (Washington Times)

By Kelly Riddell and Jeffrey Scott Shapiro

February 3, 2015

The Washington Times

The chairman of a special House committee created to investigate the 2012 Benghazi tragedy on Monday instructed his staff to review secretly recorded tapes and intelligence reports that detail Hillary Rodham Clinton's role in advocating and executing the war in Libya, opening the door for a possible expansion of his probe.

Rep. Trey Gowdy's decision to seek a review of the materials, first highlighted in a series of Washington Times stories last week, carries consequences for the 2016 election in which Mrs. Clinton is expected to seek the presidency. It could also move the committee to examine the strained relationship between the State Department and Pentagon, which sharply disagreed over the 2011 war in Libya and the response to the terrorist attack on the U.S. compound in Benghazi a year later.

The Times reported last week that U.S. intelligence did not support Mrs. Clinton's story of an impending genocide in Libya that she used to sell the war against Moammar Gadhafi's regime. The newspaper also unveiled secretly recorded tapes from Libya that showed that the Pentagon and Democratic Congressman Dennis Kucinich so distrusted her stewardship of the war that they opened their own diplomatic channels with the Gadhafi regime.

The tapes included candid conversations and allegations that Mrs. Clinton took the U.S. to war on false pretenses and was not listening to the advice of military commanders or career intelligence officers.

"Chairman Gowdy and the committee are aware of the details reported by The Washington Times, and we are reviewing them as part of the committee's inquiry into Benghazi," Benghazi Committee spokesman Jamal Ware announced Monday.

The emergence of the tapes and a new line of inquiry immediately had repercussions, especially on the political front where the 2016 president race has heated up.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky, a 2016 GOP hopeful who has been intensely critical of Mrs. Clinton's handling of the 2011 Libya intervention, said the stories demonstrate she is not the right person to lead the country or the nation's military.

"Hillary's judgment has to be questioned – her eagerness for war in Libya should preclude her from being considered the next Commander in Chief," said Sen. Paul, who opposed the Libyan intervention at the onset.

"We want someone in that office with wisdom and better judgment... We created chaos in Libya – as a result many arms have gone to Syria which are now aiding jihadi terrorists. I couldn't fathom how Hillary Clinton could become Commander and Chief after this," he added.

Mrs. Clinton's spokesman have declined any comment about the tapes.

The Times reported that on one of the tapes, a Pentagon liaison told a Gadhafi aide that Army Gen. Charles Jacoby, a top aide to Adm. Mullen, "does not trust the reports that are coming out of the State Department and CIA, but there's nothing he can do about it," the Pentagon liaison said, offering a candid assessment of tensions within the Obama administration.

"I can tell you that the President is not getting accurate information so at some point someone has to get accurate information to him... I think about a way through former Secretary Gates or maybe to Admiral Mullen to get him information."

Rep. Ted Poe, R-Texas, chairman of the U.S. House Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security and Investigations, said the Pentagon's actions were "highly unusual," but said that it would make sense for the Pentagon to want to make sure their Commander in Chief was getting accurate information.

"I think it's unusual to have the military say wait a minute, that's not true," Mr. Poe said in a telephone interview with the Times. "You have a false report from the Secretary of State, and then the military holding a completely different view of what's taking place.

"They wanted [the president] to have facts – facts as opposed to what Secretary Clinton was hoping the facts would be; that Moammar Gadhafi was killing innocent women and children. That was a false narrative. So, it would make sense that they would want to get that information straight to the president and not go through the Secretary of State," he added

In reaction to the Times final installment of the series on Monday, which revealed secret Libyan intelligence reports that linked NATO supported rebels to al-Qaeda, Rep. Louie Gohmert said the news was not a complete surprise.

"During the Obama-Clinton hunger to enter a bombing war in Libya, some of us knew the rebels included al-Qaeda but we did not know the full extent of their involvement," he said. "So we pleaded for U.S. restraint. With bombing in their heart and radical Islamists whispering in their ears, the Obama-Clinton team would not even entertain offers of a ceasefire and peaceful transition of power. While acting under U.N. approval to prevent atrocities, it appears the Obama-Clinton bombing barrages caused atrocities that sent a country into chaos which is continuing today.”

The Times series about the Libyan intervention was also picked up across the Atlantic.

Britain’s Daily Mail described the story as “stunning” declaring that, “[Sec.] Clinton will face tough questions about her march to war against Moammar Gadhafi if she runs for president.”

Mr. Poe said that he believes the series will prompt new questions, especially with the current state of military and political affairs in Libya.

“As far as I’m concerned Benghazi is not going away,” Mr. Poe said. “That the U.S. would give in and arm rebels and criminals to overthrow Col. Gadhafi, and then mislead the world on that is shameful. We now have chaos in Libya... it’s the U.S.’ undoing of a country. Gadhafi was no saint, but what we have now are gangsters and jihadists running the country. We have chaos because the US intervened in a deceitful way.

“Unfortunately, the administration is making more of an effort to protect Hillary Clinton’s involvement than they are in finding out the truth about what was really behind the overthrow of Gaddafi by the U.S.”

Vaccine Safety: What Barack Obama, Rand Paul, Hillary Clinton, Chris Christie Say (WSJ)

By Byron Tau

February 2, 2015

The Wall Street Journal

The recent outbreak of measles in the U.S. has focused renewed attention on the growing number of American families who are opting out of childhood vaccines. Politicians have struggled to explain their positions in the often-emotional debate that pits established public health practices against a small but vocal group of parents who decline to vaccinate their children, citing worries about autism and other maladies.

Most schools require children to be vaccinated against various diseases, but many allow parents to skip vaccines if they have religious or other objections.

Potential 2016 candidates Chris Christie, Ben Carson and Rand Paul spent Monday engaging on the issue, a day after President Barack Obama told parents they should heed the best scientific advice and get their children vaccinated. Here's a rundown of what various politicians have said about vaccine safety.

Chris Christie

On Monday, Mr. Christie called for a "balance" between what parents want and what public health demands in remarks in England.

"It's more important what you think as a parent than what you think as a public official. I also understand that parents need to have some measure of choice in things as well. So that's the balance that the government has to decide... Not every vaccine is created equal, and not every disease type is as great a public-health threat as others," he said

His office later clarified in a statement:

"To be clear: The governor believes vaccines are an important public health protection and with a disease like measles there is no question kids should be vaccinated. At the same time different states require different degrees of vaccination, which is why he was calling for balance in which ones governments should mandate."

Mr. Christie also previously wrote in a campaign letter that he "stand[s]" with parents who want "greater parental involvement in vaccination decisions."

Ben Carson

Mr. Carson, a celebrated neurosurgeon, strongly backed the larger cause of public health immunization programs:

"Certain communicable diseases have been largely eradicated by immunization policies in this country and we should not allow those diseases to return by foregoing safe immunization programs, for philosophical, religious or other reasons when we have the means to eradicate them."

Rand Paul

Mr. Paul, another physician, defended the rights of parents to not vaccinate their children. In a testy CNBC interview, Mr. Paul said that vaccines often did good, but that parents should have the freedom to opt-out if they desired as a matter of liberty. He also added:

"I have heard of many tragic cases of walking, talking normal children who wound up with profound mental disorders after vaccines. I'm not arguing vaccines are a bad idea. I think they are a good thing, but I think the parent should have some input. The state doesn't own your children. Parents own the children. And it is an issue of freedom and public health."

Hillary Clinton

In 2008, Hillary Clinton was asked in a questionnaire from an autism group about whether vaccines should be investigated as a "possible cause" of autism. She answered: "I am committed to make investments to find the causes of autism, including possible environmental causes like vaccines."

Monday night, she tweeted: "The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let's protect all our kids."

Barack Obama

President Barack Obama has made differing statements on the issue, saying at one appearance that there might be a link between vaccines and autism and that scientists should investigate.

10/18/2016

At a 2008 rally, Mr. Obama said:

“We’ve seen just a skyrocketing autism rate. Some people are suspicious that it’s connected to the vaccines. This person included. [ Points to person in audience.] The science right now is inconclusive, but we have to research it.”

In an interview that aired before the Super Bowl on NBC on Sunday, Mr. Obama said the science behind vaccines was “pretty indisputable” and encouraged parents to vaccinate.

John McCain

Mr. Obama’s 2008 opponent, Sen. John McCain, has also raised questions about the safety of vaccines:

“It’s indisputable that [autism] is on the rise among children, the question is what’s causing it. And we go back and forth and there’s strong evidence that indicates it’s got to do with a preservative in vaccines.”

Hillary Clinton hits GOP with pro-vaccine tweet (CNN)

By Dan Merica
February 3, 2015
CNN

Washington (CNN)Hillary Clinton jumped into the political story of the day late on Monday night with a tweet that compared people who deny the power of vaccines to those who question whether the earth is round or the sky is blue.

Clinton is the prohibitive favorite for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016 and the tweet was seemingly aimed Republican presidential hopefuls who have questioned whether vaccinations should be required and whether they are tied to mental disorders.

@HillaryClinton

The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let's protect all our kids.
#GrandmothersKnowBest
10:45 PM - 2 Feb 2015

Clinton ends the tweet with a nod to her granddaughter, Charlotte, who was born late last year. Clinton regularly used her grandmother status as a rhetorical tool while campaigning for Democrats in 2014.

Federal health officials have expressed concern over a recent measles outbreak that has been fueled by skepticism among some parents of infant vaccination schedules. Measles is a disease that children are regularly vaccinated against.

The issue has become political, despite the fact that claims like vaccines leading to childhood autism have been debunked by scientific research.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky questioned the safety of vaccines when he said he had "heard of many tragic cases of walking, talking, normal children who wound up with profound mental disorders after vaccines."

"I'm not arguing vaccines are a bad idea. I think they're a good thing. But I think the parents should have some input," he said during an interview on CNBC.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, when asked about the issue, said that he chooses to vaccinate his children, but added, "Parents need to have some measure of choice in things as well, so that's the balance that the government has to decide."

Former Hewlett-Packard CEO Carly Fiorina, who is also exploring a 2016 run, told BuzzFeed that while she thinks vaccinating for the measles makes sense, the decisions should be up to the parents.

But renowned neurosurgeon Ben Carson, also a potential Republican presidential candidate, broke from the pack and defended mandatory vaccinations.

"Certain communicable diseases have been largely eradicated by immunization policies in this country and we should not allow those diseases to return by foregoing safe immunization programs, for philosophical, religious or other reasons when we have the means to eradicate them," he told BuzzFeed.

But Carson aside, these comments from Paul, Christie and Fiorina contradict with what Clinton tweeted and President Barack Obama said in an interview on Sunday.

"I understand that there are families that, in some cases, are concerned about the effect of vaccinations," Obama told NBC News before the Super Bowl. "The science is, you know, pretty indisputable."

Both Obama and Clinton have altered their opinions on this issue, though, because during the 2008 presidential nomination fight, the two left the door open to vaccines causing autism and other issues.

Obama said the science was "inconclusive," while Clinton wrote in an anti-vaccine questionnaire that she was "committed to make investments to find the causes of autism, including possible environmental causes like vaccine."

Hillary Clinton: The earth is round and vaccines work (USAT)

By Catalina Camia

February 3, 2015

USA Today

Hillary Rodham Clinton tweeted her support for vaccinations on Monday night, wading into a debate that moved to the front of the 2016 presidential campaign with comments from Chris Christie and Rand Paul.

Clinton, the former secretary of State and a likely Democratic candidate, came down on the side of doctors and scientists who believe in vaccinating children against diseases such as measles.

While she didn't mention the Republicans by name, her tweet is viewed as a rebuke of Christie and Paul. She also used the hashtag #vaccineswork, as well as noting her status as a grandmother.

@HillaryClinton

The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let's protect all our kids.

#GrandmothersKnowBest

10:45 PM - 2 Feb 2015

Clinton's tweet came after Christie, the New Jersey governor, told reporters the government should find "balance" on the issue and that "parents need to have some measure of choice" when it comes to immunizations. Christie later walked back his comments, issuing a statement through his office stressing that he believes "there is no question kids should be vaccinated" when it comes to diseases like the measles.

Paul, a Kentucky senator and ophthalmologist, then said in separate radio and cable TV interviews that he believes most vaccines should be "voluntary." While saying he is not anti-vaccine, Paul said in a heated CNBC interview that he believes "parents should have some input. The state doesn't own your children ... and it is an issue of freedom and public health."

The Kentucky senator also offered that he had "heard of many tragic cases of walking, talking normal children who would up with profound mental disorders after vaccines." But he did not cite specifics.

The comments from Clinton, Christie and Paul came after President Obama encouraged parents to vaccinate their children, amid a measles outbreak that sickened more than 100 people in 14 states. Obama said the science regarding vaccines is "indisputable." Most of these measles cases have been linked to an outbreak that originated at Disney theme parks in California.

Hillary Clinton Enters Vaccinations Debate to Rebuke Likely 2016 Rivals (Time)

By Zeke J. Miller

February 2, 2015

Time

Former U.S. Secretary of State and likely Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton re-emerged on the political scene Monday evening to critique several likely rivals.

In a tweet, Clinton dismissed those who believe that vaccinations are linked to autism, hours after New Jersey Governor Chris Christie and Kentucky Senator Rand Paul suggested that parents be granted some element of control over what inoculations their children receive. Her public comments follow a period of relative quiet from Clintonland as she gears up for an all-but-certain presidential campaign in 2016.

@HillaryClinton

The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let's protect all our kids.

#GrandmothersKnowBest

10:45 PM - 2 Feb 2015

On Monday morning, Christie said parents should have “some measure of choice” over how their children are vaccinated, when asked about an outbreak of measles in the U.S. His office later backtracked, saying the dad of four believes “with a disease like measles there is no question kids should be vaccinated. At the same time different states require different degrees of vaccination, which is why he was calling for balance in which ones government should mandate.”

In a contentious interview with CNBC on Monday afternoon, Paul said he didn't see why his position that most vaccines should be voluntary would be controversial. “For most of our history, they have been voluntary. So I don't think I'm arguing for anything out of the ordinary,” he said.

“I have heard of many tragic cases of walking, talking normal children who wound up with profound mental disorders after vaccines,” Paul added, repeating claims that have extremely dubious scientific grounds.

Clinton's statement follows something of a change of heart from 2008 when she filled out a survey from a group known as the Autism Action Network, saying, “I am committed to make investments to find the causes of autism, including possible environmental causes like vaccines.”

Hillary Clinton Joins the Fray on Vaccines (Bloomberg)

By Ali Elkin

February 3, 2015

Bloomberg

Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton threw her tweet into the ring on vaccines on Monday, writing: “The science is clear: The earth is round, the sky is blue, and #vaccineswork. Let’s protect all our kids. #GrandmothersKnowBest.”

Her remarks, coming amid a measles outbreak that has affected 14 U.S. states, appeared to be a response to potential 2016 rivals Chris Christie and Rand Paul, Republicans who each commented on the issue Monday.

Christie, the New Jersey governor, said that “not every vaccine is created equal, and not every disease type is as great a public health threat as others.” His office later sought to clarify, saying in a statement that “with a disease like measles there is no question kids should be vaccinated.”

Paul, a Kentucky senator and ophthalmologist, said: “I’ve heard of many tragic cases of walking, talking, normal children who wound up with profound mental disorders after vaccines. ... I’m not arguing vaccines are a bad idea. I think they’re a good thing. But I think the parents should have some input.”

President Barack Obama and his administration have been urging parents to ensure their children are vaccinated in light of the measles outbreak.

The episode has also turned the spotlight back to his and Clinton’s comments on vaccines during their 2008 contest. At the time, Obama said that “the science right now is inconclusive, but we have to research it,” and Clinton answered a questionnaire by writing, “I am committed to make investments to find the causes of autism, including possible environmental causes like vaccines.”

Skepticism of vaccines’ safety stems largely from a 1998 study linking the measles, mumps, and rubella immunization to autism. The study was later retracted and its conclusions debunked by other research.

Why Matt Drudge might be more powerful now than ever before (WAPO)

By Chris Cillizza

February 2, 2015

The Washington Post

Matt Drudge is currently running a “poll” on his website — it’s the Drudge Report if you have paid no attention to politics for the last 17 years — that asks readers to choose their preferred 2016 Republican presidential candidate. As of 3:15 pm eastern time, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker was dominating with 47 percent (more than 84,000 votes) followed by Texas Sen. Ted Cruz at 14 percent and Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul at 13 percent. Former Florida governor Jeb Bush, who has been anointed by the party establishment as the frontrunner in the race, takes 5 percent.

Who cares, you might ask? A totally non-scientific poll — you can vote as many times as you want! — on a conservative link site. Blah. It’s so 1990s.

Except that Drudge — and his Web site — remains a decidedly relevant player in the political world, particularly with a crowded Republican presidential primary on tap and Hillary Clinton set as the de facto Democratic nominee in 2016. David Freedlander, in a piece entitled “Who Will Win the 2016 Matt Drudge Primary” at the Daily Beast, writes of Drudge:

His massive traffic regularly hits around three-quarters of a billion monthly page views, and he can be a key Internet traffic driver to more mainstream news sites. Opposition researchers say Drudge is best at surfacing stories on blogs and in the local press that would not get much coverage otherwise, and that in some ways a Drudge link can be better than getting something on the evening news, as it will have a longer shelf life on social media.

(The piece also has the “Is Drudge dead” speculation that I’ve been hearing since at least the 2008 election. The reality — as someone who has followed the Drudge Report closely for the better part of the last decade — is that while the site looks like crap, predicting Drudge’s demise is a fool’s errand.)

Drudge’s importance to 2016 is threefold:

1. As suggested by Freedlander’s piece, Drudge is an ideal landing place for hard-hitting opposition research on one of your political opponents. He’s more likely to simply take it and post it rather than looking for where the holes are — as a more mainstream site would do. And, because of Drudge’s traffic, which isn’t just big but also influential (think reporters, cable TV bookers and other campaigns), everyone you want or need to see it will see it. When you have 20+ people running for the Republican nod, there’s going to be lots of dirt to drop.
2. Drudge (and his small crew of editors) use the influence of the site to push what they believe to be overlooked stories within a campaign. And, as Freedlander notes, Drudge tends to have a storyline (or two) that he grasps onto and stays with for weeks or months. In 2008 (and 2012) that was how Romney was stronger than many people gave him credit. (That coverage was attributed in no small part to Drudge’s close working relationship with Romney campaign manager Matt Rhoades.) So far in this cycle, Drudge has been hard on Bush (highlighting lots of stories that suggest the former Florida governor isn’t all that conservative) and quite kind to Walker. Here’s the current lead of the site:

If Drudge continues to push Walker, it will matter in terms of how the Wisconsin governor is regarded by Republican politicians. Ditto Bush — although to a lesser extent because Bush is such a known commodity in Republican circles. (Ask any nascent campaign for the GOP nomination whether having Drudge “like” them matters. If they say anything but “yes,” they are lying.)

3. Hillary Clinton. Drudge’s site rose to notoriety in the late 1990s by revealing many of the details about Bill Clinton’s relationship with Monica Lewinsky. Since then the site has had a fascinating relationship with Clinton. During much of the late 2000s Drudge (and the site) seemed favorably inclined — as much as a conservative site could be — to her. But, since Clinton has emerged as a likely 2016 candidate, the coverage of Clinton by Drudge has taken a turn — focusing almost exclusively on her health and questioning whether she is up to another run for president. Drudge lacks the influence with the left that he retains on the right, but the sheer volume of eyeballs he gets means that if he wants to push a negative story on Clinton (and he will) it will make its way into the general news stream in some form.

Drudge isn’t all-powerful. But, 2016 is shaping up as a race in which he will have as much — and, likely, more — influence than he’s ever had before. With such a crowded Republican field, the candidate — or candidates — that Drudge chooses to favor will benefit. And those who he turns negative on will rue the day and wonder what they could have or should have done differently.

All of the Republican campaigns (and maybe even the Clinton campaign) will fear him — and have a strategy on how to deal with him. That, in my book, is real influence. And Drudge has it.

Subject: Monday's Return Flight

Hi John-

Apologies for the abbreviated follow up as I'm sure you are receiving a very high volume from our offices at this time.

If you can please send me your name as it reads on your ID and date of birth over the weekend, our office will make sure your return flight to DC is handled by Monday.

The available departing times are currently 8:30pm (Delta: LGA- DCA), 9pm (United: LGA- DCA) and 9:30pm (AA: JFK-DCA), but please note, seat availability is scarce at this time.

Please let me know your preference as soon as you can.

Best,
Jenny

Hi John-

We have two options for your return into DC next Monday.

There's a 9pm United flight from LaGuardia that arrives in DCA at 10:14pm and a 9:30pm from JFK that arrives in DCA at 10:45pm. Do you have a preference?

Am I correct in understanding you do not need a ticket into NYC?

Please confirm your name listed on your ID and date of birth and we'll take care of the ticket.

We really appreciate your flexibility!

To: Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com>

Here are a few thoughts on great policy talent, to go along with Comms/Press names I gave you. All could be day to day policy director or dep policy director material.

David Zikusoka -- he's about 32, Harvard grad, worked on '07-'08 policy staff of Obama campaign doing domestic policy, foreign policy staffer for Biden, and now at DoD. Ugandan parents. Ziggy is incredibly smart, hard working and a delight to be around. Jake Sullivan should know him well (he worked for Jake when he was with Biden).

Wally Adeyamo -- he's about Ziggy's age, maybe a few years older. Yale law. Worked for Geithner and Neil Wolin at Treasury, CFPB, and I'm not sure where in Admin he is now but could track him down. Whip smart, serious, has management expertise so could run policy process. I believe he has worked on campaigns (maybe Edwards?) in past.

I would guess that both Ziggy and Wally would be very interested if role was senior enough. Three other people who might be good, though perhaps harder to pull from what they are doing now:

Jason Green -- Yale Law, about 34, former Obama campaign staff, White House counsel's office, now running a startup. Very interested in long term career in politics in Maryland.

Michelle Jawando -- former Gillibrand legislative director. Now VP for Legal Policy at CAP.

Deirdre Henry Spires -- superstar former senate finance committee staffer when Baucus was chair, she was point on everything from tax policy to unemployment to health care. Jason Furman and I tried to get her high ranking assistant secretary post at DOL when she left senate. I think she maybe took something at HHS with Sylvia. Very talented. She's about 40, with family, so may be tougher. But she is great.

Over 2,500 people took our survey. 52% of you said that our number one priority should be expanding public transportation, and many of you said that we need a comprehensive approach.

Director's Forum

Cybersecurity & Innovation: It's the States, Stupid

Governor John Hickenlooper will give a special talk about efforts in Colorado to address a rise in cyber threats while also driving innovation and creating jobs. As Federal support for cyber incidents begins to focus on the most high-level targets, leaving states and their businesses and non-profits to fend for themselves in the event of a breach, new solutions are necessary.

The Governor will describe his state's initiatives, including a new National Cybersecurity Intelligence Center, which will provide training, incident response and serve as a resource for business, non-government organizations, and Colorado government officials. Why does it matter and what will it do?

Dear John & Mary, Trust you saw the Email that Neera copied you on.

Our visit to the DC area is now firm – the event we're attending on Fri, 17-Apr-2015 is actually in Alexandria VA.

We'll move over to Washington DC on Sat, 18-Apr-2015 – probably at the Ritz Carlton – by around lunch time..

Would love to meet and wonder if any time on Sun, 19-Apr-2015 would work for you.

We're trying to connect with Joe Duffey as well – you might remember, John, that you introduced us to him at the Clinton Rye Brook retreat..

Amrita and I would love to host an afternoon or evening meal where all of us might get together.

Do let us know what would fit best with your schedule.

Hi Neera! Hope all's well with you and the family in this pre-election year...

We have a possible reason to visit Washington DC for an event on Fri, 17-Apr-2015.

Ideally, for us, we'd fly in that Friday morning, stay the weekend and come back home Sunday night (or) Monday morning.

Would we have a chance to meet on any of those dates?

We could fly in a day earlier on Thu, 16-Apr-2015 if that works better.

If possible, we'd love to also meet John & Mary Podesta.

They've always been so gracious and kind to us.

Email addresses I have for both of them are no longer valid.

Please tell them we asked about them and would be delighted to host an evening on any of those days.

Of course, we'd be tickled if we could all get together...

John:

We have exactly 100 days left to make Iowa's fresh start happen.

I've been campaigning across the state this weekend, with Monica Vernon in Ames and Sioux City, while I attended the Italian-American Heritage Festival in Des Moines and then headed to Creston, Corning, Clarinda, and Council Bluffs before joining Governor Martin O'Malley in Sioux City.

We're campaigning hard every day because we know Iowans are ready for a fresh start. We'll create jobs from the community up instead of giving huge tax breaks to undeserving corporations.

We can make the change with your help. Please make a contribution of \$75, \$50, or \$25 today.

We'll rebuild our rural roads and bridges that are among the worst in the country. Our schools will be world class again, and Iowa's children will again have a chance to get an early start with preschool.

We are coming down to the final stretch. Will you join us and restore honesty and integrity to Iowa's government?

Please make a contribution today of \$75, \$50, or \$25 to give us the boost we need.

You can count on us to make the change we need. Can we count on you?

Thanks,

Jack Hatch

My impression had always been that while world savings/golden west led in the area of adjustable rate mortgages they did so with pretty conservative underwriting and underwrote to the fully indexed rate. That is certainly not the impression on gets from the current media and I tried to figure out how i know that and i cant find anything to that effect in a quick review. Whatever the case there, given their role in CRL and advocacy for sound underwriting practices the charactchure (sp?) is unfair.

What do you think? Right now it is too long... too much resume history and not specifics? As a reminder, it should hit on the following (with emphasis on standing among my peers). One thing none of my letters really hits on is my potential contributions to CFR since i am actually not sure what to say about that...

intellectual attainment and expertise;

degree of experience, interest, and current involvement in international affairs or in other areas affecting international affairs; promise of future achievement and service in foreign relations;

potential contributions to the work of CFR;

desire and ability to participate in CFR activities; and standing among his or her peers.

I am writing to second the nomination of Mae Podesta to join the Council on Foreign Relations as a Term Member. I've known Mae since she was a child, having the pleasure to both watch her grow up and navigate her career, as well as seeing her work first hand when she spent a summer at Walmart with my Sustainability team. Mae would be a terrific Term Member to the Council and she'll bring a wealth of knowledge, experience, and enthusiasm for foreign relations and a passion for emerging markets.

Mae's interest for international issues, particularly trade, economic development, and international business, has been the constant thread in her academic and professional career. In college, Mae pursued double majors in International Relations and Economic Relations and spent a summer interning under Ambassador Nicholas Burns at the US. Embassy in Athens in 2001. Shortly after graduating, she jumped at the chance to join the Clinton Foundation Health Access (CHAI) and contribute to fighting the burgeoning AIDS epidemic in Africa. Starting as a volunteer in South Africa, she worked her way up the ranks, opening offices in Lesotho and Ethiopia and Liberia, and becoming Regional Director of all West and Central Africa when she was only 27, managing many people twice her age.

She loved CHAI, but came to believe she'd make a bigger difference through the private sector, ultimately bringing her to Columbia Business School, Walmart, McKinsey, and now Optoro. At Walmart, Mae helped shape our Global Sustainable Agriculture goals, and made her mark pushing forward our global women in agriculture work. I was impressed at her ability to immerse herself in Sustainability team, drive the agenda, and credibly present her recommendations to Walmart's senior leadership. She spent the last 4 years at McKinsey where she was rated a distinctive member of her class. At McKinsey, she continued to build her international business chops, focusing on emerging markets growth strategies for healthcare clients. Excited to get back to a more entrepreneurial environment like CHAI, Mae was recently recruited to join Optoro, a high profile startup in DC, as the Director of Corporate Strategy where she'll be leading its international expansion agenda.

Whether it's as the head of Optoro's international division or coming back to public service, I have no doubt that Mae will continue to have an extremely successful career in foreign relations as she continues to pursue her interests in business, economic development, and sustainability. The Council will be lucky to have her as a term member.

Yes. It was the deciding vote. There was a AP wire story about it.

DNC has a hit out already.

See attached tracking video of McCain on the stump saying we should pass this. Hoping to get Think Progress to put this out.

Senate GOP beat back the Dem plan to add $40 B to the stimulus in the form of checks for seniors and disabled vets along with extension of unemployment benefits. We'll have to see what his spokespeople say about his position on the bill, but worth keeping an eye on....

"The 58-41 vote fell just short of the 60 required to break a GOP filibuster and bring the Senate version of the stimulus bill closer to a final vote. The Senate measure was backed by Democrats and a handful of Republicans but was strongly opposed by GOP leaders and President Bush, who objected to the costly add-ons. The vote left the $205 billion Senate stimulus bill in limbo and capped days of partisan infighting and procedural jockeying over the measure. Democratic presidential candidates Hillary Clinton of New York and Barack Obama of Illinois flew to Washington for the vote. GOP front-runner John McCain of Arizona did not vote."

HALIFAX INTERNATIONAL SECURITY FORUM CONGRATULATES TRUDEAU

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

October 20, 2015

Washington, DC—Halifax International Security Forum today congratulated Canada's new Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the Liberal Party of Canada on winning Monday's federal general election.

"We applaud Mr. Trudeau and his team for their outstanding campaign," said Peter Van Praagh, President of Halifax International Security Forum. "And we look forward to welcoming Canada's new government to Halifax International Security Forum next month."

The 2015 Forum will be held November 20-22 in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Now in its seventh year, the annual meeting addresses the most important security issues for Canada and for the world by bringing together leaders from over 60 countries.

"In a world where transitions of power are often marred by violence, instability, and fear, Canada again leads by example," Van Praagh said. "Transitions of government driven by ideas can inspire the world."

Halifax International Security Forum works to advance a modern vision of security by promoting greater strategic cooperation among the world's democracies. By bringing together individuals who are on the ground facing consequential local threats, writers who challenge and influence the world's thinking on security, and decision-makers who make the tough choices, new ideas are shaped.

"It is our judgement that solutions for a more secure and peaceful world begin with sharing ideas and experiences," said Van Praagh. "Representing one of the world's leading democracies, Canada's new government is assured of an appreciative international audience this November in Halifax."

Halifax International Security Forum is an independent, non-profit, non-partisan organization based in Washington, DC.

Hi Neera - Hope you're enjoying your summer. I've really appreciated the advice you've provided about the campaign and am hoping I can get your counsel once again. I've pretty much given up on joining the campaign as staff but sitting on the sidelines is killing me. So, I'm wondering if Podesta or another senior member of the campaign would be interested in having me as a volunteer for 20-30 hours/week. While my job is busy and rewarding, it also provides a lot of time after hours and on the weekends to do other things and would love to channel that energy into the campaign. I think I could be helpful working on longer-term projects like working on policy rollouts, creating plans for caucus/primary night events or developing plans for the convention.

In addition to the 20-30 hours/week, I would also be willing to spend a few long weekends (Thursday-Monday) in Brooklyn each month (on my own dime) and take some extended time off from GW around in January 2016 if they need all hands on deck in Iowa or New Hampshire. I think I could get Lorraine to agree to this flexible schedule as she's aware of my interest in working with the campaign but does not want me to leave the university.

What do you think? Do you think the Podesta would be interested? Would you be willing to talk with him about this idea?

As always, thanks for your guidance!

Jin

Subject: Assault on choice

Dear John,

I just can't believe it - Representative Bart Stupak is back at it. He and a dozen or so of his colleagues are trying to block health care reform by reinserting a dangerous, anti-choice provision into President Obama's health care bill. I'm sure you were just as shocked as I was when you heard the news.

Representative Stupak's amendment was resoundingly defeated in the Senate before because it discriminates against women and poses a dangerous health risk to women and girls from every state. You helped me defeat this dangerous policy once - now I need your help again. Please stand up to Stupak's dangerous attempt to stop health care reform by signing our petition today.

Please click here to sign my petition to STOP STUPAK and protect reproductive health care for all women.

After months of Republican obstructionism, we are finally about to pass real health care reform that will provide coverage to millions of Americans. Yet, a handful of politicians with extremist points of view are holding the bill hostage. Not only are they bringing Congressional negotiations to a halt, they're purposefully misleading the public and media about what is in President Obama's health care legislation.

Click here to sign my petition and stand up to Representative Stupak's attempts to change current law and deny a woman's right to choose.

We simply cannot let them continue this extremist assault on women's health. Politicians in Washington need to hear from you.

Thank you for your effort. Together we will pass President Obama's health care reform and protect reproductive health care for all women in this country.

Sincerely,

Ami:

Attached is a proposal for a program that CHAI could implement in the first quarter of 2012 that would help expand coverage for people with AIDS in the US who are now unable to access affordable drugs. We have done enough research to feel that we have a decent chance of success.

Please forward to President Clinton to see if he wishes us to proceed.

Thanks

On 40th Anniversary of Man's First Steps on the Moon, Americans United for Change Re-Releases Ad "Jobs of the Future"

Ad Compares JFK's Moon Challenge That Led to the Jobs of the Future and President Obama's Clean Energy Challenge That Will Do the Same

Click Here to View "Jobs of the Future"

Washington D.C. – On the 40th anniversary that man first walked on the moon, Americans United for Change re-released its television ad "Jobs of the Future" today that invokes images of President John F. Kennedy and compares his challenge of putting a man on the moon that led to the technological jobs of the future to President Obama's challenge to create millions of new clean energy jobs for our generation. The spot, which originally aired in May, will re-air nationally on MSNBC and continues to urge Congress to support the American Clean Energy and Security Act, which passed in the U.S. House last month with bipartisan support.

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "There is not a more shining example of what America is capable of when challenged than landing a man safely on the moon 40 years ago today. President Kennedy's great challenge to his generation wasn't just met, it was surpassed as the American innovation behind it led to the technological jobs of the future. Today, President Obama has put forward another great challenge for our generation: making America the global standard in clean energy. Thanks to the extraordinary leadership in the House, Congress has already begun to meet that challenge, advancing historic legislation that rewards clean energy innovation, weans our nation off its dependence foreign oil, makes us more secure, dramatically curbs pollution that causes Global Warming – all while creating millions of new jobs in the process. As the American Clean Energy and Security Act continues to move forward, which side of history will Members of Congress be standing on: millions of clean energy jobs of the future or clinging to the failed policies of the past?"

SCRIPTFACTS

ANNCR: Fifty years ago a young President challenged us to put a man on the moon. John Kennedy's vision put America in the forefront of the technological revolution that created the jobs of the future -- for a generation of Americans.

"I believe that this nation should commit itself to achieving the goal, before this decade is out, of landing a man on the moon and returning him safely to the earth. No single space project in this period will be more impressive to mankind, or more important for the long-range exploration of space."
[\[President John F. Kennedy address to Joint Session of Congress, May 25, 1961\]](#)

The Apollo Moon Program employed, directly or indirectly, 400,000 people – engineers and scientists – and spawned development in the fields of rocketry and aeronautics, as well as in areas of civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering. [\[In the Shadow of Moons documentary ; "Apollo's Contribution to America," nasa.gov\]](#)

ANNCR: Today President Obama has challenged us again – to create the jobs of the future for our generation – millions of clean energy jobs.

"Through investments in scientific research and development, and the vigorous pursuit of alternative and renewable energy, we can create millions of green jobs that allow us to reduce greenhouse gases and excel in a competitive global economy." [\[President Obama's Earth Day Proclamation, 4/22/09\]](#)

ANNCR: But the oil companies and the Republicans just say no.

CG: NO

Congressman John Fleming (R-La.) said no to clean energy jobs, referring to them as "paper mache jobs." [\[Talk News Radio Service, 5/7/09\]](#)

Rep. Rob Bishop (R-UT) said no to clean energy jobs, saying they are "as real as the Jolly Green Giant" and don't really exist. [\[Salt Lake Tribune, 5/5/09 \]](#)

Sen. Kit Bond (R-MO) put out a report entitled, "Yellow Light on Green Jobs," which argues that clean energy jobs are too expensive. He has said, "Green jobs are not so much created as they are bought with massive taxpayers subsidies." [\["Yellow Light on Green Jobs" Spring 2009 , St. Louis Post Dispatch, 4/27/09 \]](#)

Chevron and ExxonMobil Sponsor Groups Working Against Clean Energy Jobs. Chevron Corporation and ExxonMobil are both large donors to the Heritage Foundation, which last month held an event entitled "Busting the Myth of Green Jobs." According to the advisory, the event would "examine some of the fundamental flaws in the green jobs-as-an-economic-salve line of argument."
[\[Heritage Foundation Annual Report, 2008 , 2007 , 2006 , 2005, 2004 ; Heritage Foundation Press Advisory, 4/5/09\]](#)

ANNCR: There have always been those who said no to progress. But America has never taken no for an answer.

ENDCITIZENSUNITED.ORG

On Tuesday we told you we were in range of hitting a groundbreaking $5,000,000 to End Citizens United.

At first, we were absolutely FLOODED with grassroots donations. But then, our momentum started to plummet.

Just look at the latest from ActBlue:

John, there's still time to turn things around -- and deliver a massive setback to the Koch Brothers and their corporate buddies. But only if we act quickly.

Rush a donation of \$5 or more to help us hit our \$5,000,000 goal by midnight >>

Chip in \$35 immediately >>

Chip in \$50 immediately >>

Chip in \$100 immediately >>

Chip in \$250 immediately >>

Or donate another amount >>

We're ready to elect Democrats who will fight tooth-and-nail to fix our broken political process. We're not going to let right-wing billionaires buy our elections any longer.

But first, we need your help.

Please, John -- don't let us miss this goal. Chip in $5 right now and you'll become a Founding Member of End Citizens United:

Subject: 235 donations from Washington

 Organizing for America

John --

Powerful special interests are pledging to spend $200 million to help elect conservatives this fall.

But President Obama has advocated for a different kind of politics since he launched his campaign, and it's because of supporters like you that we've never let special interests buy their way to victory.

This November, it's the same game plan. Instead of asking for checks from PACs and lobbyists, we're counting on 3 million grassroots donations to elect strong allies for President Obama.

We need just 25,000 donations this week to be on track to meet that goal -- and are counting on 235 donations from Washington.

Please donate \$3 today and add your name to the *By the People Fund* .

Organizing for America supporters like you set this movement apart -- and together, we're changing politics.

With your help, we're going to run a real, grassroots, on-the-ground campaign to win in November -- knocking on doors, making calls, and talking to neighbors in every single state.

As we saw in 2008, no amount of special-interest money can compete with that.

Please donate $3 or more today:

WASHINGTON—In response to remarks made this morning on immigration by former Secretary of State and Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, SEIU International President Mary Kay Henry issued the following statement:

"Hillary Clinton is right: it's time for, in her words, a 'full and equal path to citizenship' that will bring immigrants out of the shadows to become engaged participants in our communities and in our economy. Immigrant justice is a moral imperative that must be a priority for candidates in 2016, and working people will hold accountable any politicians who defend the idea of second-class status for millions of immigrants in this nation of immigrants."

Depending on this, we should also have some friendly Dem in Congress introduce legislation to subject Congress to FOIA. Cummings could do it and ask Issa, Chaffetz and Gowdy to co-sponsor. I'm sure the leadership wouldn't appreciate giving up the carveout, but chances are it would never reach the floor anyway.

Alternatively, we could tee up some good government group that is always pouncing on us to make the point.

Mr. Lowell,

it's an honor to virtually meet you. I should preface this by saying I'm a jailhouse lawyer as a result of being around Cheryl and others for so long and so intensely.

Here is what we are thinking and hoping you can help us with: this kerfuffle with the Secretary's email is obviously one we are trying very hard to work through and to explain to people. Comes down to the right to know, transparency, etc. Which we strongly believe in, and why we turned over her email. Obviously, the committee investigating the Benghazi attacks have latched on to this, as well as others in and out of Congress who claim this subverted several processes, including FOIA. We do not agree with that, but in the course of this we've discussed an ironic hypocrisy that we believe the public would benefit in knowing before judging anyone's intentions and practices:

Congress is exempt from FOIA.

Because Congress exempted itself from FOIA.

Congressional offices do not have to even respond to FOIA requests, let alone fulfill them. I worked on Capitol Hill for seven years and always found it hypocritical (right before I filed the request in the circular cabinet as they say). So while the Republicans and conservative groups tie the Federal Government up in stitches working on FOIA requests for my communications with reporters or Cheryl's with HRC, their own communications with entities such as the RNC or FOX where they are likely coordinating — or at the very least discussing — is blinded from the public eye.

So we thought one way to demonstrate this would be for someone to submit a series of FOIA requests to a number of Hill offices, specifically, the Chairman of the Select Committee, Rep. Trey Gowdy, along with his fellow Republicans on the Committee, as well as others such as Darrell Issa, Jason Chaffetz, Lindsey Graham — all those who pound their chests about the public's right to know how their government functions. Just not their 1/3 of it! And let them respond or not. My guess is that most requests would come back on letterhead with a standard answer. And btw, there is nothing preventing someone from voluntarily complying with such a request. Obviously, those responses would be very compelling to the news media.

You can probably guess who we thought that someone could be. Given your stature and career, we can't think of anyone better to make the point that the representatives of the people, including the People's House, does not want the people to see what they are doing.

Happy to discuss by phone, and thank you for entertaining what you may consider a harebrained idea.

Best,

Philippe

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (R), who’s made no secret of his national ambitions, sat down over the weekend with the Fox affiliate in Milwaukee, which asked him about his possible presidential campaign. The Republican governor’s response seemed noteworthy.

“To me, I’m not going to run just because of the pundits or anything else like that. The closer you get to something like that the more you realize – and I say this only half-jokingly – that you have to be crazy to want to be president. And anyone who has seen pictures of this president or any of the former presidents can see the before and after. No matter how fit, no matter how young they are, they age pretty rapidly when you look at their hair any everything else involved with it.

"Whether it's two years, six years or 20 years from now – because I think of Hillary Clinton. I could run 20 years from now and still be about the same age as the former Secretary of State is right now."

In context, the question the reporter asked was, "Do you have a sense that this is your moment?" There were no previous references to Clinton or ages; it was just what Walker had on his mind at the time, and he felt inclined to share the thought, no matter how gratuitous it was.

The Wisconsin governor's comments come just a week after Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) was "none too subtly raising the issue of her age," too.

To be sure, we're still very much in the oblique phase of the debate, though Walker was more direct than Paul, so I'm not suggesting the left crank the Outrage-O-Meter to 11. Clinton has no doubt heard much more offensive criticism from Republican rivals before.

That said, this is an awkward game Republicans are playing.

As we discussed last week, there is an inevitability to all of this. Reagan, at age 69, faced questions about his age in 1980, as did John McCain in 2008 at age 72 and Bob Dole in 1996 at age 73. Clinton is 67 now, she'll be 69 in 2016, and if she runs she'll have to talk about this. I rather doubt this will be a problem for a possible Clinton campaign, but we'll find out soon enough.

But GOP candidates and their allies have to realize that a preoccupation with this issue won't do them any favors. Republicans are already struggling with a gender gap; the more they run around needlessly referencing Clinton's age, the more they risk making matters worse.

Incidentally, the former Secretary of State is a half-year younger than Mitt Romney. That doesn't seem to affect occasional chatter about his possible ambitions.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "Backers set deadline to convince Warren to run"

By Peter Sullivan

November 18, 2014, 11:36 a.m. EST

A group urging Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) to run for president on Tuesday announced a Feb. 16 deadline to get her to jump in.

The group, Ready for Warren, has started an online petition, where they are trying to gather 100,000 signatures by the President's Day deadline.

According to MSNBC, which first reported the new effort, the group will also seek to flood Warren with hand-written letters calling on her to run.

"Warren is well-known enough already that she could jump into the race far later and still win," founder Erica Sagrans will write in an email to supporters, according to MSNBC. "But the fact is that we'll soon be one year out from the Iowa caucuses, so we can't afford to wait."

Warren has passionate backing on the left, and liberals have encouraged her to run amid concerns that Hillary Clinton is too close to Wall Street.

But Warren has repeatedly insisted that she is not running.

Warren was invited to address a gathering of the liberal donors of the Democracy Alliance last week, while Clinton was not. The Democracy Alliance said that was not an indication of a preference for president.

There were rumblings last week that the Clinton camp is in the early stages of setting up meetings with liberal groups such as the Progressive Change Campaign Committee and Democracy for America.

Washington Post blog: She The People: "How Elizabeth Warren is already influencing Hillary Clinton's 2016 bid"

By Nia-Malika Henderson

November 18, 2014, 11:04 a.m. EST

Nobody parses Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren's words about her political future closely than Erica Sagrans, the campaign manager for the "Ready for Warren" draft movement. And Sagrans was paying particularly close attention recently, as Warren assumed a new leadership post in the Senate Democratic caucus -- a move that Sagrans says underscores her emergence as the future of her party. Now Sagrans is planning a stepped up effort, capitalizing on a midterm election that saw Warren in a number of states campaigning for Democrats and expanding her brand to unlikely places like West Virginia. The group is set to launch today "Time for Warren," an effort that will culminate on President's Day, with 100,000 letters being delivered to Warren, urging her to run for president in 2016. They have also hired Kate Albright-Hanna, who ran then Senator Obama's video team in 2008. We caught up with Sagrans, who is also an Obama alum, about continuing to build momentum around Warren, who has so far said she has no plans to run. Our conversation is below, edited only for grammar.

FIX: What was the takeaway from the midterms?

Sagrans: The midterms were a clear moment that shows we need leaders that are courageous and inspiring to people and ones that have clear plans and ideas that speak to people's lives and struggles. We need someone to run like that in 2016 to give people a reason to get involved. We need candidates who aren't trying to play it safe, which is what we see in Warren. There is a question now about where the Democratic party is headed and we want to see it going in Warren's direction. We should have that debate in the Democratic primary. Her new role shows she is a leader in the Democratic party and whatever her future role is, she will guide the Democratic party. It's an exciting development that she is getting recognized, but her platform would be bigger if she were to run for president.

FIX: Democrats lost big among Southern whites. People in Clinton's circle are arguing that they can expand the map by appealing to Southern whites. What do you make of that argument?

Sagrans: We saw in the exit polling that people in general are frustrated and two thirds of people say the system is rigged in favor of the rich. Overall there is frustration that crosses racial lines. Warren's appeal to white voters is that she is speaking to that frustration with the failure to help working families. Her populist streak could bring in voters who may have not been as interested in Democrats more recently.

FIX: In Massachusetts, where Warren was at a campaign event for Martha Coakley, Hillary Clinton tried to do her populism thing by saying corporations don't create jobs.

Sagrans: That moment showed Warren's effect already on the Democratic primary. Clinton is embracing her language around corporations and Wall Street. She has pushed the language that Clinton is using. It's a start. But we want to see more than that. We want to see Clinton and future candidates really embrace Warren's words and views and passion when it comes to working people taking on Wall Street and helping students with debt, for instance. There are places where they agree, but places where Warren goes further in how she wants to do things. Part of it is also the people we want to see in charge and who they are accountable to.

FIX: There's been some speculation that now, just maybe Warren, who has said she won't run, might be using different language signaling that she might just do it.

Sagrans: We saw her open the door to running with the People magazine article she did. She said you never know what could happen in response to a question about 2016. She is considering it. She hasn't made a decision yet. We have this opportunity to convince her to run. We've got retired women in Iowa working on this, a pretty active group in New York, a leader in Connecticut, somebody on the ground in Florida. People who have popped up and asked how they can help all over the map. We are also going to ramp up our focus on the early states, Iowa and New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada and raise money to hire state coordinators and build stronger local teams in those places. And we are going to focus on an aggressive media[strategy] and doing a lot of video and we will get them to Warren and to the public about why people are calling on her to run.

Washington Post blog: Post Politics: "One Democrat with no position on the Keystone XL pipeline: Hillary Clinton"

By Philip Rucker

November 18, 2014, 11:31 a.m. EST

With Senate Democrats divided over whether to approve the Keystone XL oil pipeline in a vote Tuesday night, they won't be getting any guidance from the person poised to become their standard-bearer.

Hillary Rodham Clinton has no stated opinion on the matter.

A former secretary of state and U.S. senator and likely 2016 presidential candidate, Clinton has refused over the past several years to weigh in on the contentious debate. She has said that her connection to the State Department, which has been central to the Obama administration's review of the pipeline, prevents her from taking sides.

For Clinton, there is no upside to taking a stance. If she came out in favor of the pipeline, she would anger environmental and climate activists, including super PAC founder Tom Steyer and many other major Democratic donors. If she opposed it, she would be at odds with the business community.

Yet as she moves toward a presidential candidacy, Republicans have been trying to draw her into messy congressional debates. With embattled Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-La.) scrambling to round up votes from her Democratic colleagues ahead of Tuesday night's scheduled Senate vote, Republicans are criticizing Clinton for remaining neutral on such a high-profile and contentious issue.

"She wrote a book called 'Hard Choices,' but she wouldn't take an opinion on the Keystone Pipeline," said Tim Miller, executive director of America Rising, a GOP group leading the attack on Clinton. "She may be the only person in America without a position on the Keystone Pipeline at this point."

A Clinton spokesman did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

During multiple speaking appearances and interviews in Canada earlier this year, Clinton has been asked about the Keystone Pipeline. In June, she told The Globe and Mail:

"We have no better relationship. [But] this particular decision is a very difficult one because there are so many factors at play. I can't really comment at great length because I had responsibility for it and it's been passed on and it wouldn't be appropriate, but I hope that Canadians appreciate that the United States government – the Obama administration – is trying to get it right. And getting it right doesn't mean you will agree or disagree with the decision, but that it will be one based on the best available evidence and all of the complex local, state, federal, interlocking laws and concerns."

As she told an audience in March in Vancouver, "No comment."

The Week: "Why Hillary Clinton will struggle to rebuild the Obama coalition"

By Edward Morrissey

November 18, 2014, 9:52 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] The stars aligned for the Democrats in 2008 and 2012. It may not happen a third time.

In the wake of the disastrous midterms for Democrats, analysis of their prospects for the 2016 elections — and especially the outlook for Hillary Clinton — ranged from shrugs to panic. Some argued that the unique turnout models of midterms do not allow for any projections in a presidential cycle, while others talked about an electoral realignment. Neither extreme applies, but the elections show that the Democrats do have a big problem: it will not be easy for Hillary Clinton, should she choose to run, to rebuild the coalition that won two elections for President Obama.

First of all, one must take care not to over-apply the midterm results to non-midterm elections. Republicans learned that lesson in 2012, especially when it came to analyzing poll results. Analysts on the right, including myself, made the mistake of thinking that the electorate had changed permanently in 2012, going so far as to "unskew the polls" to apply a turnout model closer to the 2010 results. While the 2012 election turned out millions fewer voters for Barack Obama, the model of those who did vote trended much closer to 2008 than 2010, and the president won re-election over Mitt Romney.

Similarly, Democrats and analysts on the left hoped that the 2014 midterm turnout would prove 2010 a fluke. That assumption turned out to be wrong, and the failure produced similar results. Pollsters assumed that Democrats' get-out-the-vote efforts would recreate their success from two years earlier. Even Republican pollsters bet incorrectly in that regard, which created poor decisions on resource outlays.

The point is that voter predictions have always relied on assumptions about the demographics. The gathering of data was not the issue, but how it got applied.

That has been a problem ever since Barack Obama first ran for president. After two terms of George W. Bush, nearly everyone predicted that the nation would turn to the Democrats, especially after the GOP got creamed in the 2006 midterms. The Clintons had kept their political machine in place, waiting for the opportunity to make a return to the White House. With national discontent directed at Republicans and Hillary Clinton winning a second term in the U.S. Senate, the conventional wisdom considered the Democratic primary a coronation rather than a fight.

Enter Obama. Largely on the basis of his memoirs and a blockbuster speech at the 2004 Democratic National Convention, Obama offered a change from the normal political cycles. He got people who normally sat on the sidelines interested in the electoral process. His team proved superior at identifying Democratic primary voters and getting them to the polls. The freshman senator found new donors and new activists to outperform even the Clinton machine, overturning all assumptions about the composition of the electorate as Obama inspired a youth movement.

He outfought the Clintons to the end, and wound up trouncing John McCain in the general election. Four years later, Obama hung onto enough of those voters to see "the Obama coalition" triumph one more time.

The problem for Hillary Clinton is just that point. Without Obama at the top of the ticket, even in the reduced-inspiration mode of 2012, that coalition is unlikely to emerge a third time. Whatever other qualities she will bring to a presidential campaign, neither novelty nor outsider populism will be among them. The Clintons are a known commodity; by the time the 2016 elections arrive, they will have been part of the Washington, D.C., scene for almost a quarter-century.

Furthermore, the national mood has shifted away from Democrats, thanks to Barack Obama. His approval ratings have plummeted, and a new scandal this week with ObamaCare architect Jonathan Gruber won't restore much luster to the Democratic brand. The shoe is squarely on the other foot for Democrats in 2016.

The Clinton team still hasn't recognized the reality of the predicament faced by Hillary and her party. Talking Points Memo interviewed Ready For Hillary activist Mitch Stewart, who claimed that the Clintons could compete for voters who rejected Democrats two weeks ago, especially in states like Arkansas, Indiana, and Missouri. "Where I think Secretary Clinton has more appeal than any other Democrat looking at running," Stewart argued, "is that with white working-class voters, she does have a connection."

There are a number of holes in that argument, but let's look at Arkansas first. Both Clintons campaigned hard in Arkansas for incumbent Democrat Mark Pryor, who lost his Senate seat to Tom Cotton by a whopping 17 points. He won only 29 percent of white working-class voters, despite having a well-known family name, the advantages of incumbency, and full-throated support from the former first couple of Arkansas.

Chris Cillizza of The Washington Post explains that Stewart's assumptions are based on a voter model that's outdated, plus it ignores the fact that any improvement would be incremental at best. Both Indiana and Missouri have become much more Republican, even in elections with Obama on the top of the ticket; he lost both states in 2012 after winning them in 2008. "Clinton would almost certainly do better with white working-class voters than Obama did," Cillizza writes. "But, in some of the states that Stewart puts in that first bucket, that's a pretty low bar."

Obama transformed the electorate by being a transformational candidate, at least in promise and theory. He also had the wind at his back with the economic collapse in late 2008 and general fatigue with Bush and Republicans. The latter has reversed, which means that any Democrat would have a difficult time inspiring the Obama coalition back into force, let alone an establishment figure (and an Obama administration official) like Hillary Clinton.

She looks less like Barack Obama in this scenario than she resembles John McCain. She would be running on a damaged party brand, representing continuity rather than change — a symptom of the problems of Washington rather than their cure.

ABC News: "Clinton Tourism: Go Along on a 'Billgrimage'"

By Liz Kreutz

November 18, 2014, 12:01 p.m. EST

The first Billgrims came 10 years ago.

Following the opening of the Clinton Presidential Library Nov. 18, 2004, travelers descended on Arkansas like never before. Suddenly, the state was welcoming people from all around the world who came to tour Bill Clinton's library and, along the way, visit other historic landmarks related to the former president.

The trip became known as a "Billgrimage."

A classic Billgrimage includes a visit to four cities in Arkansas: Hope, to see Clinton's birthplace; Hot Springs, where he graduated high school; Fayetteville, where he and Hillary Clinton taught law; and Little Rock, the state's capital where he was governor and that served as the launch pad for his political career.

Originally, visitors were given a small "passport" by Arkansas' tourism bureau and could get stamps at each destination they visited in the state. The passport has since been discontinued and, these days, fewer people make the entire four-stop trail. But Little Rock continues to see a huge tourism boost, largely to the presidential library, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary today.

In the past decade, its economic impact on the local community has totaled an estimated $3.3 billion, according to a new study released Monday, and longtime residents talk incredulously about the transformation they've seen.

"Oh gosh, it's huge," Paul Leopoulos, a friend of Bill Clinton's since elementary school, who had just reunited with the former president to celebrate the library's anniversary, recalled Saturday morning at the sunlit office of his arts education foundation in North Little Rock.

"When they finally announced they were going to build it everything started to change. Businesses and hotels opened up immediately, and this was two years before the thing was even built."

And for Richard Davies, the executive director of the Arkansas Department of Parks and Tourism, the library was the "shot in the arm" the city needed.

For those on the Billgrimage in Little Rock, there are five must-see historic sites. These are the Governor's Mansion, a former house of Bill and Hillary Clinton, the Capitol Building, the Old State House Museum where Clinton gave his election night speeches and, lastly, the library, which looks like a big box (or as one Billgrimage blogger described it, a trailer house), that sits prominently along the Arkansas River and houses nearly 100,000 archival documents from Clinton's eight years in the White House.

For Joe Purvis, another childhood FOB ("Friend of Bill's"), a Billgrimage is not complete without indulging in the local cuisine.

"I love to eat," Purvis said, looking down upon his belly from the high-rise of his law practice in downtown Little Rock, "And I can ensure that before his heart attack, the president liked to eat as well."

The spot to go is Doe's Eat Place, a local favorite known for its tamales and 3-pound steaks.

"Bill Clinton, in his prime, would certainly go to Doe's," Purvis quipped, but questioned whether his new diet would allow him to make the visit.

A waitress there, however, said Clinton still comes in to the restaurant roughly once a year, but did concede that now as a vegan, there's little on the menu that he can eat.

Subject: 1st in the Nation

Dear John,

Yesterday, Joe hosted the "first-in-the-nation" town hall on the landmark healthcare reform signed into law last week - just as he was the first member of Congress last summer to hold the "first-in-the-nation" town hall on health care reform during the August recess.

As Joe commented, "The voters didn't send us to Washington to duck the tough issues. They sent us to take them head-on, both before and after the votes are cast."

It's that type of leadership that has been the hallmark of my brother's career, both as an Admiral and a Congressman. And it's that type of leadership that is resonating with Democratic voters here in PA, and across the nation.

It's why CNN and Fox News yesterday covered Joe's "first-in-the-nation" townhall, and it's why yesterday Down with Tyranny, a leading national blogger, posted:

- Rep. Joe Sestak's insurgent campaign to wrest the Pennsylvania Democratic Senate nomination away from Dem-for-a-day Arlen Specter is on fire with no-nonsense, serious discussion of a vast array of crucial issues, staking out forceful positions ... I get a real sense of a voice emerging here.

A voice is emerging here.

A Democratic leader with the power of his convictions to bring change to Pennsylvania and forceful leadership to the U.S. Senate.

To get Joe elected, we must reach our end-of-the quarter goal! It's as simple as that. Please make a contribution of \$15, \$25, \$50, \$100, or even more, and it will be matched \$2 for every \$1 contributed.

This is our opportunity to elect a real leader to the U.S. Senate - someone who won't duck the tough issues and will take them on. Let's make this happen. Thank you!

Best,

Rich Sestak
Campaign Director

Subject: reminder - weekend of Feb 1

Hi Mom and Dad -

I think you know this but I'm in DC the first weekend in Feb with 5 of my girl friends. I'm planning to come down on Thursday night from Horsham. At least 3 of my friends are planning to stay with us Friday night - Jan 31st (and all 5 on Saturday). We're going to the ballet on Saturday so I suggested we have dinner with you on Friday on the later side - 9ish?

Does this work?
thanks!

Subject: HRC just called for you, 4pm

HRC just called for you - I told her you were at DOD until 5:15pm, she asked that you email her when you're free - and she'll call you, she said she's in/out of meetings but would like to speak with you this evening.

Tony,
I dropped two letters to LLC in your Belmont mail box. One is a new tax bill. Let me know if we can contribute to that. I'm back Thursday.

Right. What I meant to say was that we'll get them to you by electronic or hand, and then we can all decide what to do prior to friday. Does that work?

Satter and George are a no go. Out of town and with kids, respectively.

I'll talk to Gabe. Jane is in town--shall we court her?

I went ahead and just made the Res with NextCar Rockville last week under Gabe's name knowing we can cancel 24 hrs in advance if we find one. I'm still hoping my neighbor will get back to the note I left.

More importantly, what are we going to do about Clay? Do you have someone willing to weather the tropical storm? Clay has people he can reach out to--Emily said she can too. I doubt we could get George at this last minute, but Satter might be crazy enough.

We did receive, and I have incorporated your comments. Are we set on doing two separate meetings? That is, a first staff meeting to discuss the corporate review and a second meeting to discuss personnel changes? If so, I will remove the second piece from the talking points and recirculate.

I had a call with Mac Toler this morning. Mac works for the majority on the Committee, and wears two hats: he is both an attorney and the Committee's "security manager." He has requested from us the following:

1. Highest priority, as soon as possible: a list of any individuals who would want to be in the SCIF, in the event that a SCIF session is necessary, so that they can confirm clearances with DOS. Notably, on this point, he said "This is just Mac speaking, so take this with a grain of salt, but I don't think we want to go into a classified session" because of the logistical hurdles, but said they need to plan for that contingency in case HRC requests the need to go into classified session in order to answer a question, or another member asks a question that requires such an answer. I asked what the highest level of classified info at issue would be; he believed we should plan for up to TS/SCI, and confirmed that in a follow-up email.

Heather

2. The number of people (preferably a list with names) who are on what he called the "Clinton Team" who will need to be seated in the row behind her.

I would rather give number [7] vice names

*Note - I plan to be in hold room if my preference prevails

3. The number of people (if any) who plan to stay in the break-out room (as opposed to needing a seat in the hearing room).

My preference is to give number - 15

In terms of who actually are must-shows if they can come:

John P

Jen P

Brian F

PIR

Jake

Huma

Phil B

Mike S

Amy S (W&C)

4. The number of guest passes we are requesting for seating in the general audience.

100

5. Any logistical requests we might have (e.g., with respect to parking spaces).

4 parking spots

To: Roach, Ann

Subject: Letter for John Podesta

Dear Mr. Podesta:

I am writing to you as a current donor to Secretary Clinton's campaign, a member of the Rockefeller family with a long and deep commitment to public health, and as a physician concerned about the health effects of fracking.

I spent the last seven years studying the health, environmental & climate side effects of fracking. Just before the fracking ban I presented a summary of health impact studies (attached) to then Acting Commissioner of Health Howard Zucker and Governor Cuomo. I felt very happy to have played an active part, as both a physician and donor, in the ban of fracking in NYS. The New York ban has inspired health-impacted people all over the United States and the world.

I am also writing you because I'm sensing among a number of donors (current and potential) a growing concern about what we see as a lack of clarity and firmness in Secretary Clinton's position on the air and water pollution from fracking in particular - and fossil fuel extraction in general.

To her credit, she has made an off-hand statement to the effect of the need to "cut back" on drilling, but nothing beyond it that I can find. We have looked at her statements in comparison to those of Senator Sanders. There is quite a contrast in the strength of his positions versus hers. In short, she has not offered a single specific proposal to crack down on even the worst excesses of the oil and gas industry's highly polluting practices.

I read your interview in The New Republic with great interest, and that is what inspired me to write to you. I know first hand that there is a growing hunger among the donor circles I am familiar with to hear more details of the commitments she is willing to make on things such as:

Methane (always accompanied by volatile organic compounds and other toxins in flow back and produced fluids) pollution leaks from existing infrastructure

Removing fat federal subsidies to drillers.

In addition my highest priority is to see Secretary Clinton acknowledge the health side effects of fracking, just as physicians do with all our drugs and procedures.

I believe the message of cutting the use of polluting fossil fuels for health and climate reasons will be very attractive to the voters the Secretary badly needs right now. Governor Cuomo's ratings skyrocketed after he banned fracking based on health concerns.

Speaking to you I'm sure would give me the insight I could take to fellow funders who share these concerns. I want to reassure them that Secretary Clinton understands these issues and that more commitments are forthcoming.

Please let me know if we could speak briefly and how best I can reach you.

Best regards,

10/18/2016

Federal employment law is constantly evolving. Several recent cases have had a major impact on how attorneys litigate these cases. We will examine these cases and other legal developments. Topics will include:

- Rights civilian employees who work for the federal government possess, as opposed to their active duty military co-workers;
- Recent Supreme Court cases including Vance v. Ball State University and University of Texas Southwest Medical Center v. Nassar;
- The significance of Ward v. USPS and its progeny;
- The Office of the Attorney General's December 15, 2014 Memorandum regarding Treatment of Transgender Employment Discrimination Claims Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964;
- The status of litigation regarding the furlough of federal employees in the summer of 2013 and
- The continued backlog of EEO complaints and the danger of reprisal.

Good afternoon!

I hope you were able to make it out to our Community Summer Luau earlier today!

If you missed it or you would like seconds, we have the Volcano Cake (chocolate), Banana Cream Pie, Key Lime Pie, and the Passionfruit Cheesecake set up in the 5th floor kitchen of McDonough. For savory items, we have the Pacific Noodle Salad, Pork, and Rice as well.

Additionally, there are 5 palm tree water coolers nesting upstairs at our office waiting for a new home! Please let me know if you would like one (or all) – they're great for a house party.

Enjoy the rest of your day!

Biden will be in Chicago on Mon, Tues, Wed. next week. I presume you will want him to make brief remarks at the three public events, as he did during the FP roll out.

Can someone tell me:

1. If you want him to go first (introduce Obama) or last (wrap up)?
2. The info we need to write his remarks for Monday, at least -- so we can circulate them tomorrow for your review / ok?

Hello Mr. Podesta,

I hope you are well. I am writing you to arrange a meeting between Hip Hop icon and visionary Q-Tip and Democratic presidential frontrunner Hillary Clinton. He would like to meet with her to discuss ways he can be used as bridge to the Hip Hop generation during the 2016 presidential campaign.

Q-Tip who is an ambassador member of Harry Belafonte's Sankofa.org has long been highly committed to issues of social justice. Q-Tip is devoted to amplifying the voices of the disenfranchised in an effort to promote justice, peace and equal rights for all. He is a big supporter of the work Mrs. Clinton has done throughout her career and has also worked alongside former president Bill Clinton at a 2003 DNC fundraiser. He even served as DJ for Chelsea Clinton's 25th birthday party in 2005. He's had a lasting track record with the Clinton's throughout the years. In fact, he had hoped to see Mrs. Clinton at his close friend Tory Burch's fundraiser tomorrow in The Hamptons. However, due to a prior commitment in Los Angeles, he will be not be able to make it.

Q-Tip would love to have short one-on-one with Mrs. Clinton as soon as her schedule permits. He will return to New York City on Monday.

Please let me know what can be arranged at your earliest convenience. Q-Tip is passionate about helping Mrs. Clinton secure a victory in this presidential race. Thank you in advance for your time.

A timeline of the GOP presidential hopeful's path to wealth.

10/18/2016

December 17, 2007

Romney and Bain Capital

1978: Mitt Romney joins Bain & Co., a Boston-based management consulting group founded by William W. Bain Jr.

1984: Romney tapped by the company founder to lead a spin-off called Bain Capital, a venture capital and private equity group.

October 1997: Bain Capital launches the Sankaty group of U.S.-based debt hedge funds. To assist U.S. tax-exempt and foreign investors, Sankaty organizes a subsidiary in Bermuda called Sankaty High Yield Asset Investors Ltd.

February 1999: Romney takes a leave of absence from Bain Capital. Bain Capital at midyear has $5.5 billion in assets under management, including $2 billion in the Sankaty funds, according to an independent evaluation.

February 2001: Romney is listed in SEC documents as president and sole shareholder of the Sankaty company in Bermuda.

August 2001: Romney announces plans to retire from Bain Capital to run for governor of Massachusetts. Before he steps down, he invests in BCIP Associates III Cayman, a private equity fund organized in the Cayman Islands.

January 2003: He puts his financial holdings into a blind trust.

2003-2007: Romney's trustee continues to invest in the Cayman fund.

2006: The Cayman fund pays Romney more than $1 million in interest, dividends and capital gains. He retains a profit share in Bain Capital until 2009, as well as investments in more than 30 Bain funds.

2007: Bain Capital manages $60 billion in assets, including $23 billion in Sankaty funds.

The Bush Legacy Bush Decommissioned After Coast-to-Coast Tour

Mission Accomplished: 5 Months, 42 States, 23,549 Miles, 150 Stops Later - the Failures of 8 Years of Bush-Conservative Governance Cemented Into History for Millions of Americans

Washington D.C. – 42 States, 23,549 miles, and 150 stops later, progressive issue-advocacy group Americans United for Change today officially decommissioned its 45 foot long, 28 ton Bush Legacy Bus, bringing an end to a successful national tour launched near the White House on June 24th. In an historic year, one that supporters of President George W. Bush dubbed his “legacy year,” the Bush Legacy Bus, a museum-on-wheels featuring several interactive exhibits on how eight years of Bush-conservative governance harmed our national security while sacrificing so many important key domestic priorities, was visited by tens of thousands of Americans throughout the country and was seen and heard on local television, radio and newspapers by millions more, with a “Cumulative Est. Publicity Value” of over $2.5 million, according to Critical Mention media service. *See below for a compilation of pictures, local TV and news paper clips, and notable quotables from the tour. Click Here to Download High-Resolution Bus Photos

The majority of the tour stops took place near the hometown constituent offices of President Bush’s conservative backers in Congress -- including stops in 51 battleground congressional districts and 33 battleground Senate states -- where Members’ record of voting in lock step with Bush’s failed policies were spotlighted, including Senator Sununu (NH), Senator Smith (OR), Rep. Walberg (MI), Rep. Knollenberg (MI), Rep. Chabot (OH), Rep. Keller (FL), Rep. Feeney (FL), Rep. Drake (VA), Senator Dole (NC), Representative Porter (NV), Representative Sali (ID), Representative Kuhl (NY), Rep. Hayes (NC), Rep. Musgrave (CO), and Rep. English (PA).

Jeremy Funk, of Americans United for Change: “It is our hope that the Bush Legacy Project helped extinguish any future effort of supporters of this President to try to redefine and reenvision the Bush legacy as anything less than a disaster. But this effort wasn’t just about Bush – it was about the conservative ideology he and his allies in Congress represented. Conservative ideology rails against government, argues that government is the problem, not the solution. So when a government run by conservatives is faced with the most important responsibility any government has – to protect its citizens – is it any wonder you wind up with a tragedy of epic proportions like Hurricane Katrina?”

“It is our hope that conservative ideology as a governing philosophy is now itself history,” continued Funk. “Conservatives had it their way in Washington for 6 years, and today, we’re facing the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression thanks to their insistence on irresponsible government deregulation, misguided tax breaks for the rich, and marching the nation into a $3 trillion, bloody and needless war in Iraq. Since Bush took office, 7 million more Americans are without health insurance and the cost of healthcare, groceries, medicine, and gas has exploded. Tens of thousands of Americans each week are losing their jobs, their homes, and their dignity. The big oil, drug and insurance companies had an all-access pass to this White House and the Republican-controlled Congress while middle-class Americans families were left behind. Millionaires and big corporations that outsourced U.S. jobs were handed more and more tax breaks that never managed to ‘trickle-down’ to anyone else. Enough was enough. The American people delivered their verdict on the Bush-conservative legacy on November 4th, and it is our hope that we helped create an enduring progressive majority that will continue to offer real solutions the American people have been looking for to provide quality and affordable healthcare for all, move the economy forward, and keep the eye on the ball of real threats to our national security.”

The Bush Legacy Bus visited symbolic and historic sites like the Superdome , Bush’s home away from home in Crawford, TX, both the Democratic and Republican national conventions, “The Birthplace of the Republican Party ,” Mt. Rushmore, the St. Louis Arch , the Alamo, the Grand Canyon, and the Florida Supreme Court in Tallahassee. The bus even ran into Senator John McCain’s ‘Straight Talk Express’ during our travels...twice.

A number of groups have sponsored or partnered with AUFC on the Bush Legacy Bus, including Center for American Progress Action Fund, AFSCME, SEIU, AFL-CIO, VoteVets.org, MoveOn.org Political Action, Healthcare for America Now and American Rights at Work, among others.

Where we've been...

Running Scared: Notable Responses to the Bush Legacy Tour from Bush's Enablers in Congress

U.S. Rep. John "Randy" Kuhl (NY-29)

[Kuhl's] communications director, Meghan Tisinger, issued the following statement: "Several objective watchdog groups have rated Congressman Kuhl as an independent vote in the House and an independent voice for western New York." [Fairport-ER Post, 7/1/08]

However, Representative Randy Kuhl says all administrations have some dents. "I just think in the last six months of a president's term in office, the energy that some people are using to try to create controversy could be used in a more constructive way for the betterment of the country," says Kuhl. [WETM TV, 7/1/08]

U.S. Rep. Bill Sali (ID-1)

"Is that a criticism or are they trying to flatter us?" responded Wayne Hoffman, spokesman for Sali. "The congressman promised two years ago he'd go to Washington, D.C. and fight for conservative Idaho values, and he's done exactly that." However, Hoffman added, "Congressman Sali has not voted in lockstep with President Bush. In fact, he has criticized the president of a variety of different positions taken by the Bush Administration, and he has been open about that." He cited Sali's opposition to an energy bill that Bush signed into law, and his support for veto overrides on funding for water projects and farm legislation. [Spokesman Review, 7/21/08]

U.S. Senator James Inhofe (R-OK)

Josh Kivett, Inhofe campaign manager, said Inhofe is "an independent, conservative" voice for Oklahoma who proved with his vote against the Wall Street bailout that he does not always agree with the president. "Sen. Inhofe has always fought for Oklahoma's interests in Washington without regard to party or politics," Kivett said. [AP, 10/15/08]

U.S. Senator Susan Collins (R-ME)

Executive Director of the Maine Republican Party, Julie Ann O'Brien says, "The bus is a humorous attempt at trying to put blame on the President and conservatives for the state in which our country is." She says the issues cannot be tied to conservatives in an honest and direct way. [WCSH TV, 7/4/08]

U.S. Rep. Charlie Dent (PA-15)

Congressman Dent's office says the accusations are simply not true. It says Dent is an independent in the House and his voting record proves it. [WFMZ TV, 10/28/08]

U.S. Rep. James Walsh (NY-25)

"A busload of liberal followers isn't the kind of change New Yorkers are looking for this election season. If Barack Obama wants to allow his Democrat surrogates to continue their smear campaign that's his prerogative, but New Yorkers are not at all confused about his 'new' brand of politics," said Blair Latoff, a Republican National Committee spokeswoman. [Syracuse Post-

Standard, 7/2/08]

"It's laughable that the big government, pro-tax Washington-based special interest group that sponsored this tour to deflect attention from the fact that the Democrats in control of Congress have failed to address the No. 1 issue impacting American families right now – sky-high gas prices – chose a gas-guzzling, diesel fume-spewing bus to spread their message across the country," said Dan Gage, a spokesman for Rep. James Walsh, R-Onondaga. [Syracuse Post-Standard, 7/2/08]

U.S. Rep. Tim Walberg (MI-07)

Walberg spokesman Matt Lahr said that despite what his critics may say, Walberg has been an "independent voice" and he "has not been beholden to the president or to the Republican Party." "From opposing No Child Left Behind and amnesty for illegal immigrants to supporting unemployed Michigan workers, Congressman Walberg has stood up to President Bush when necessary and been an independent voice for the 7th District," Walberg campaign manager Justin Roebuck said in a statement. [Jackson Citizen-Patriot, 9/23/08]

U.S. Rep. Sam Graves (MO-06)

A spokesman [for Sam Graves] characterized the bus as a "media political stunt by out of town groups whose arguments just don't hold water." [St. Joe Now, 9/11/08]

U.S. Senator James Inhofe (R-OK)

Josh Kivett, Inhofe campaign manager, said Inhofe is "an independent, conservative" voice for Oklahoma who proved with his vote against the Wall Street bailout that he does not always agree with the president. "Sen. Inhofe has always fought for Oklahoma's interests in Washington without regard to party or politics," Kivett said. [AP, 10/15/08]

U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R-UT)

Sen. Orrin Hatch released this statement: "I always do what I believe is right and in the best interest of our state and country. My positions generally reflect the opinions of Utahns, and President Bush won Utah by huge majorities in 2000 and 2004." [KSL TV, 8/19/08]

Notable Quotables from Visitors of the Bush Legacy Bus

Montgomery, AL

Zayne Smith, 28, of Montgomery, said she's heard many of the indictments against the Bush administration, but to see all of that information compiled in one place is eye-opening. "I think it puts it in black and white," she said. "It makes me want to go and do more research and see what the two candidates believe about these things." [Montgomery Advertiser, 10/8/08]

Shay Farley, 32, of Montgomery said the exhibit makes a person realize that a lot has transpired in the past eight years. "It's a lot to stomach," she said. "Though this is called the Bush Legacy Tour, you can't just blame one person. These things are the result of failed leadership holistically." [Montgomery Advertiser, 10/8/08]

Ft. Wayne, IN

For Angie Wenzel, the visit to the bus, which made a two-hour stop at 201 E. Rudisill Blvd., was a chance for her to really think about the Nov. 4 election. She said she saw the bus and said, "I just wanted to see what this is about." [Ft. Wayne News Sentinel, 10/24/08]

"A lot of people maybe kind of have forgotten," said John Paul Bodiak of Little Rock. "It definitely outlines how much of a blunder it was." [Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, 9/13/08]

Nashville, TN

"It's good to see all the facts lined up in one place," said Jamie McClanahan, who walked through the tour bus. "I learned some new facts, like the stuff about his environment record." [Nashville City Paper, 9/17/08]

Bowling Green, KY

"I know everyone is talking about it now, but the gas prices jumped out at me," said Michael Mason, who is studying history at Western Kentucky University and who intends to vote for Sen. Barack Obama. "I forgot that it only cost $15 to fill up eight years ago." [Bowling Green Daily News, 9/17/08]

Jackson, MI

"I was driving by on my way to lunch when I saw it," said Jaun Guerrero of Jackson. "I said to myself, 'Forget the lunch, I'm fed up with the Bush administration.'" [Jackson Citizen-Patriot, 9/23/08]

Sandy Vandever took in the exhibits but left the partisanship to others. "I just wanted to see it," she said. "It's part of our history." [St. Joseph News-Press, 9/11/08]

Boise, ID

Rick Bateman said he supports Bush as "a good, Christian person" but learned new information he'll consider as he decides how to vote in November. "I didn't see anything falsified in there," said Bateman. [Dan Pokey, Idaho Statesman, 7/22/08]

Erie, PA

Kimberly Kovic supports President Bush, but a walk through the Bush Legacy Tour bus left her questioning Bush's priorities. "I've always liked Bush, but there were things...in there that I didn't know about and don't like," said Kovic, 31. [Erie Times-News, 7/1/08]

Odessa, TX

Grady Henry of Odessa said he liked the information the exhibit provided on the war and the economy. He agreed with its conclusions on Bush. "I think our government's become too secretive," he said. "Our founding fathers gave us an open government, and we need to get back to that." [Odessa American, 8/8/08]

Lileana Rubio said rising oil prices have been just one of the disappointments in recent years. After turning 18, Rubio voted in her first election in 2004 and said she had wanted Bush to finish what he started but with the current situation in Iraq she wouldn't make the same decision now. [Midland Reporter-Telegram, 8/9/08]

Popkey: Anti-Bush bus promotes liberal message, but keeps things fair-minded and civil

Edition Date: 07/22/08

I've been thinking lately about how the media too often get sucked into covering the extremes. So when I went to see Big Labor's anti-Bush bus on its stop in Boise on Monday, I expected more raw political character assassination.

Instead, I found the message generally civil and in keeping with the promises of Barack Obama and John McCain to run clean campaigns.

Yes, the bus was partisan. Yes, it assailed the president on the economy, Iraq, health care and gas prices. There was rhetorical hyperbole and a mean-spirited photograph of the vice president. But the Bush Legacy Tour Bus was rooted in facts and within the bounds of fair-minded campaign speech.

I suspect the sponsors were relatively restrained because they know voters have had a bellyful of name calling, distortions and lies. Talking to folks who toured the bus Downtown suggests playing it straight works.

Rick Bateman said he supports Bush as "a good, Christian person" but learned new information he'll consider as he decides how to vote in November. "I didn't see anything falsified in there," said Bateman.

Two personal experiences have Bateman, 54, troubled by the country's direction. In 2004, his classmate from Borah High School, Rick Ulbright, a civilian special agent with the Air Force, was killed in Iraq.

"This war has gone on way too long," said Bateman, who has worked at Kmart for 28 years. "More people are losing their lives - for freedom, yes, but whose freedom? Losing a friend like that at my age, I'm thinking, Why?"

Another loss has Bateman asking how the next president will repair a troubled health care system. Bateman's mother died in March. Watching her suffer while waiting for drugs and helping her negotiate the bureaucracy convinced him major reform is urgent. That will be a key in his decision on who to support for president.

"I'm looking for someone who will truly help the people," he said, "not just say it and run."

Sen. McCain was a victim of false campaign claims in South Carolina in 2000, when opponents said he had fathered an illegitimate black child. Sen. Obama has been called a closet Muslim, and just last week, I got a viral e-mail claiming, falsely, that he'd been secretly raising millions on the Internet from Saudi bankers and the Chinese communist government.

McCain and Obama have promised us civil campaigns. Though both camps have sniped, we've seen nothing like the scorched-earth tactics of 2000 and 2004.

A good signal came Monday just before the bus rolled into town. McCain and Obama agreed to their first joint appearance in a promising venue in Southern California. They will appear Aug. 16 at the Saddleback Civil Forum on Leadership and Compassion, organized by Rick Warren, an Orange County, Calif., pastor of a 22,000-member church.

"This is a critical time for our nation and the American people deserve to hear both candidates speak from the heart - without interruption - in a civil and thoughtful format absent the partisan 'gotcha' questions that typically produce heat instead of light," Warren said.

Warren has both candidates' support for his PEACE Plan, which aims to have churches around the world focus on five issues: spiritual emptiness, corrupt leadership, poverty, disease and illiteracy. Members of his coalition, including Christian, Jewish and Muslim leaders, will meet as part of the forum that includes the candidates.

That's the kind of big-picture problem-solving Americans hunger for.

Kim Hoppie, a Boise bookbinder, stopped by the bus Monday. An Obama supporter, she nevertheless said she was glad to see McCain playing fair.

"We've lost our civility and I think that's what makes people yell at each other from car to car," Hoppie said. "We need to appreciate others' points of view and their humanity."

Rep. Nicole LeFavour, D-Boise, also visited the bus, which is sponsored by groups including the AFL-CIO, VoteVets.org and MoveOn.org.

LeFavour was pleased to see data on uninsured Americans, the growing gap between the working-class and the wealthiest Americans and financial connections between industry and policy-making. "It really did talk about the issues ahead of us and solutions," LeFavour said.

Recent history has made Americans skeptical of attack campaigns. That an anti-Bush campaign backed by liberals is sticking to facts gives me hope we'll have a conversation about addressing America's problems, not demonizing the two honorable men seeking to lead us.

Tour bus blasts Bush's policies

Richard Quiggle exits the Traveling Bush Legacy Museum which stopped in Erie at the Intermodal Center during its national tour on June 30. The 45-foot, 28-ton bus, stopped outside the office of Representative Phil English to draw attention to English's support of the Bush administration policies. The bus was greeted by members of Americans United for Change, Penn Action, the Erie Peace Initiative, and the Lake Erie Alliance for Democracy. (Janet

Kimberly Kovic supports President Bush, but a walk through the Bush Legacy Tour bus left her questioning Bush's priorities.

"I've always liked Bush, but there were things...in there that I didn't know about and don't like," said Kovic, 31.

That's exactly what organizers hoped would happen -- getting people to think about the political agendas of Bush and his administration.

The Bush Legacy Tour came to Erie on Monday afternoon in the form of a 48-foot, 28-ton moving museum. The biodiesel-powered bus was parked in the Intermodal Transportation Center lot on the Bayfront Highway to showcase what the organizers say are the Bush administration's failed foreign and domestic policies.

Erie was the sixth stop on the 50,000-mile tour sponsored by Americans United for Change, a group that favors liberal solutions to public issues.

The bus debuted in Washington, D.C., on July 23 and is scheduled to make 150 stops across the country.

Julie Blust of Americans United for Change said the bus isn't just about attacking Bush.

"It's about the conservative philosophy of government," she said.

Exhibits featured posters, timelines and videos on issues that include Iraq, the economy, Hurricane Katrina, the environment, health care, workers' rights and education.

The bus came to Erie with help of Erie Penn Action, a community-issues organization. The bus was parked as close as the group could arrange to the office of U.S. Rep. Phil English, of Erie, R-3rd Dist.

"We want to let people know about the voting record of politicians in their states as well," she said. "About those who supported the Bush administration through the terrible things you see in there."

Blust said that English has a history of voting with the president on issues. But English spokeswoman Julia Wanzco said that isn't true.

"Most objective watchdog groups have rated the congressman as an independent vote in the House and an independent voice in northwestern Pennsylvania," she said.

English voted with Bush 55 percent of the time, Wanzco said, citing the August 2007 Congressional Quarterly Presidential Support Scores.

Despite the negative focus on the members of the Bush administration and conservative politics, Richard McVay, field organizer from Erie Penn Action, said the group isn't trying to sway voters to one side or the other.

"We push issues, not candidates," he said.

Organizers said they hope to reach more people like Kovic.

Kovic is a registered Republican, but at one point wanted Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton to be president. Because Clinton is no longer a candidate, Kovic settled on the presumptive Republican nominee, Sen. John McCain.

But as the Girard resident prepared to board a Greyhound bus to Cleveland to visit family, she found herself questioning her options.

"Now what do I do?" she said.

Anti-Bush group motors exhibit into Dayton

The Bush Legacy Bus will tour 150 cities in effort link John McCain to president's policies.

By Lynn Hulsey

Thursday, June 26, 2008

DAYTON — An advocacy group brought the Bush Legacy Bus to Dayton on Wednesday, June 25, the first stop on a five-month, 150-city tour designed to bash President George Bush's record and to paint presumptive Republican presidential nominee Sen. John McCain with the same broad brush.

"It's very powerful to see the timetable and cause and effect of so many of the administration's failed policies," said Marlene Ostrow, 49, who traveled from Cincinnati to see the bio-diesel-powered rolling anti-Bush museum at Courthouse Square in downtown Dayton.

Displays in the bus include timelines, videos and photographs outlining what the advocacy group, Americans United for Change, believes are the Bush Administration's disastrous policies and actions.

Displays covered Iraq, the economy, Hurricane Katrina, health care, workers' rights and education. A large old-fashioned style gas pump sat at the back of the bus, with an electronic display that could determine the annual cost of gas to a consumer. Atop the pump was a round sign with a large "W" in the middle and the words "Bush Cheney Oil," and at the bottom, and one that said "GOP Grand Oil Party."

Asked to react to the group's message, Republican National Committee spokeswoman Blair Latoff said, "The last thing Ohioans want or need is a bus full of professional partisans rolling into town and tearing people down. Ohio needs leadership and they are looking for someone like John McCain who has demonstrated the capability and willingness to work on both sides of the aisle to get things done."

McCain was targeted along with Bush in speeches by local government officials and union and civil rights leaders. They asked the lunchtime crowd to support Democratic Sen. Barack Obama for president and they took particular aim at gas prices.

McCain is on the side of "big oil and corporate greed," said Wesley Wells, executive director of the Dayton-Miami Valley AFL-CIO Regional Labor Council.

"I agree with Senator Barack Obama. It's time for change. Don't you agree?" Wells said.

Keith Lander, 45, of Dayton came downtown to see the tour bus and hear the speakers. Given the state of the economy, high gas prices and the war in Iraq, Lander said he doesn't see how anyone could vote for Republicans in the fall. Those that do are "setting themselves up for their own demise," Lander said.

The “Bush Legacy Bus” during construction. The Democratic group Americans United For Change is launching a national bus tour to define the Bush legacy.

The bus (view a slideshow of its construction here) is a “museum on wheels dedicated to chronicling the disastrous legacy of President Bush and the conservative policies he and his allies have pursued.” The McCain tie-in is featured on the bus, where his picture is displayed in an exhibit on the war in Iraq.

The bus hits the road June 24, and is scheduled to make about 150 stops between now and Election Day, said Brad Woodhouse, the group’s president. The bus is scheduled to travel to some 41 states, and Woodhouse estimates that as many as half the stops will be parking the bus outside the house of Republican House and Senate members.

“This bus is not about bashing Bush, it is about holding him and everyone in Congress, including McCain, who voted for his agenda 90% of the time or more accountable for the war, the economy, the health care mess, etc.,” Woodhouse said.

House Minority Leader John Boehner of Ohio and Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky can expect a bus visit shortly after the D.C. launch. It will also appear at the party conventions in late summer, as well as swings through New Orleans and Crawford, Texas.

Bush-protesting tour bus stops in Norwalk

By Brian Lockhart
Staff Writer
Stamford Advocate
Article Launched:

NORWALK - Gail Wall, who spent 40 years in New Orleans until moving to Connecticut, has a hard time finding polite, printable language to describe the Bush administration's response to Hurricane Katrina.

“It simply is unconscionable. We respond to countries in need, but we could not respond to our own citizens and the Gulf Coast,” said Wall, who speaks bitterly about the friends she lost three years ago when the New Orleans levees broke.

Wall, a former Republican who now heads the Norwalk Democratic Town Committee, was in the crowd gathered at the Silver Star Diner yesterday afternoon to greet a new mobile display designed to discourage voters from returning a Republican to the White House in November.

The Bush Legacy Bus left Washington, D.C., in late June. Dubbed a “rolling museum” by its sponsor group, Americans United for Change, the 45-foot-long, 28 ton, biodiesel-powered bus has scheduled 150 stops this summer and fall, including the Republican and Democratic national conventions.

It rolled into Norwalk after 4 p.m. and left for Newark, N.J., two hours later.

10/18/2016

The bus exterior is hard to miss, with a large portrait of the 43rd president adorning its side, beside phrases including "economy in crisis," "endless Iraq War," "Healthcare's a Mess" and "Record Gas Prices."

Inside the bus, visitors can look up what the Iraq war has cost their state (an estimated $12.9 billion for Connecticut), view the boots, dog tags and family photos of Army Sgt. Patrick McCaffrey, whose death in 2004 by Iraqis posing as friendly national guardsmen was initially misreported to his family and listen to recorded testimonies from citizens who have struggled with the health care system.

They can also use a mock gasoline pump to determine how much fuel prices have increased since Bush took office in 2001 and follow a detailed timeline of the government's response to Hurricane Katrina, including recorded news footage.

"It's a very powerful display of everything we as Americans are facing at this time," said Tom Swan, who ran Greenwich Democrat Ned Lamont's insurgent 2006 campaign against U.S. Sen. Joseph Lieberman, a self-proclaimed independent Democrat.

Swan also heads the Connecticut Citizen Action Group, which helped bring the bus tour to town.

The museum lost much of its potency yesterday when a faulty generator left the interior dark and many of the displays inoperable. The bus also was without air-conditioning.

Julie Blust, an Americans United for Change spokeswoman, hoped the generator would be working again by tomorrow when the bus makes its next stop in Newark.

The Advocate yesterday asked some prominent local Republicans to visit the bus to share their thoughts, but House Minority Leader Lawrence Cafero, R-Norwalk, was busy in Hartford and Norwalk GOP leader Art Scialabba said he could not get away from work.

Cafero called Bush's legacy "a very complex thing to analyze."

President "Reagan . . . was known as the 'Great Communicator.' George Bush is the opposite. He was a terrible communicator of his ideas and policies, and he gave the impression of rigidity, arrogance and nonflexibility," Cafero said. "As a result of that - in allowing others to report his policies and his actions being filtered through the press - it has created a very negative sentiment toward the man."

A recent Gallup Poll found Bush's job approval rating at 30 percent.

Scialabba noted the Democrat-led Congress had an even lower rating - 19 percent, according to Gallup.

He also believes the current president is getting a bum rap, particularly on the Iraq war.

"It was approved by Congress," Scialabba said. "It's cost us billions. (But) so far over the last eight years, knock wood, we haven't been attacked again. I think years from now his legacy will become clearer."

'Bush Legacy Bus' rolls through Trenton

Thursday, July 10, 2008

BY LINDA STEIN

TRENTON -- A bit of political theater came to town yesterday in the form of a big, blue bus with an anti-Bush, anti-Republican message.

Dubbed the "Bush Legacy Bus," and run by Americans United for Change, the bus parked in front of the State House for several hours yesterday and offered exhibits about President Bush's policies on global warming, education, health care, the economy, high oil prices, the gap between the rich and the poor and the ongoing Iraq war.

The exhibits inside the bus, which has the feel of a museum, include a display on global warming highlighting Bush's failure to sign the Kyoto treaty on climate change and his plans for oil drilling in the Arctic.

A gas tank at the rear of the bus displays the logo "Bush & Cheney Oil" around a large "W."

Other displays include documentation of the income gap between the rich and the poor, a large photographic depiction of the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina and information about the war in Iraq, which includes the boots of a fallen soldier.

The Rev. Robert Moore, executive director of the Princeton-based Coalition for Peace Action, spoke to reporters, saying the bus is "an example of speaking truth to power."

Bush's policies "have been nothing but disastrous. He has neo-conned us into a war" that cost more than 4,000 American lives, an estimated 1.2 million Iraqi lives and billions of dollars, Moore said.

Moore, whose group has more than 3,000 members, also blamed the New Jersey Republicans in Congress for supporting Bush and approving funds for the war.

That was also the theme for La donna Blount, a spokesperson for New Jersey Citizen Action, a group that also sponsored the bus visit to the state.

Julie Blust, with Americans United for Change, which calls it self an "issue-advocacy group," said the bus, which is powered by bio-diesel, will visit 41 states over the next five months and has made stops in six states since hitting the road last month. The bus will appear at both the Democratic and Republican conventions and will go to Crawford, Texas, where Bush has a ranch.

Today it moves on to Philadelphia and Baltimore. It will also stop at the hometowns of Bush's congressional allies, Blust noted.

"We want to hold accountable those who helped Bush," she said. "We mustn't forget that Bush didn't do it alone."

Andrew Coleman, a state worker who lives in Spring Lake Heights, checked out bus yesterday.

"It's great," he said. "It's very much needed." Coleman blamed the media for ignoring a lot of Bush-related issues.

"While Democrats continue to engage in their blame-game agenda, the American people are still waiting for this Democrat-led Congress to start putting the priorities of working Americans first, especially when it comes to the sky rocketing cost of gasoline," said Ken Spain, the press secretary for the National Republican Congressional Committee, when asked to comment about the bus.

"After a year and a half of being in control of Congress, Democrats have nothing to show for it other than record-low approval ratings," he said.

Another protest came through Crawford Wednesday anti-Bush protestors brought in a bus that has been converted into a museum.

Supporters say it's meant to call attention to the low points of the Bush administration in the past 8 years. a 45 foot, 28 ton decorated tour bus made its way through the streets of Crawford. but, there's no celebrity to the dismay of some residents, it's meant to protest Crawford's own President Bush.

"We like our small town atmosphere and when all the people come in it kind of ruins the vibe." Scott Dent said. but, the 'Americans United for Change' group wheeled in and parked anyway. "We're taking aim at the conservative policies that Bush and his allies have supported." Julie Bluest with the Bush Legacy tour said.

They call it the Bush Legacy Tour and as the slogans on the outside state, they are not pleased the administration's approach to economy, war, and gas.

The inside of the bus can best be described as a museum on wheels, the floor decorated with a timeline of Bush's time in office, the walls decorated with different issues he's faced like the post Katrina response time.

Some who stopped by seemed pleased with the $1million interactive tour that jabs the administration from just about every conceivable angle. But at that price tag is some say it's not worth it.

But, not everyone who stopped by was impressed some Crawford residents came out to protest. Marcus Compton thinks it's silly to devote time and money to an outgoing president. "Its unfair to everybody, I mean really, nobody's interested." Compton said.

The Bush Legacy Tour is scheduled to make 150 stops from coast to coast. Organizers say the bus will be making stops in the hometowns of some members of congress as well. after leaving Crawford the tour bus headed to Fort Worth.

A different kind of presidential museum rolled into town Friday. And it's probably one President George W. Bush will want to skip.

The Bush Legacy Tour, featuring a 45-foot-long “museum on wheels,” parked in front of Ector County Courthouse for a couple hours Friday.

Julie Blust, the tour's press secretary, said the bus aims to link legislators like Kay Bailey Hutchison and John Cornyn with the outgoing president. Both are Republican senators from Texas.

“These conservative folks want to run away from him,” Blust said. “But he's so unpopular in so much of the country right now that we want to make sure he's held accountable.”

The biodiesel-fueled bus tour was funded by Americans United for Change, a group founded in 2005 to fight the privatization of Social Security. It was also sponsored by labor unions, as well as groups like MoveOn.org Political Action, VoteVets.org and Healthcare for America Now.

Exhibits on the bus included "The Road to Global Meltdown" which gave information on Bush's environmental policies, as well as videos on the Iraq War and Hurricane Katrina, complete with Bush telling former Federal Emergency Management Agency director Michael Brown he's "doing a heck of a job."

In the middle of the bus is a gas pump belonging to the "Grand Oil Party."

Grady Henry of Odessa said he liked the information the exhibit provided on the war and the economy. He agreed with its conclusions on Bush.

"I think our government's become too secretive," he said. "Our founding fathers gave us an open government, and we need to get back to that."

Blust said the Odessa visit was added late because the group was on its way to New Mexico and wanted to make a stop in the president's native area. Any anger over the bus seemed to have more to do with its blocking one lane of Grant Ave than its political message.

Although he said he wasn't familiar with the bus tour, U.S. Rep. Mike Conaway, R-Midland, said Friday he took issue with its description of Bush harming national security, ruining the economy and threatening Social Security.

"I disagree with that laundry list," he said. "I think it's wrongheaded and not based in fact."

Conaway said it's more important to focus on issues facing the country in the future like energy independence and controlling government spending.

"Bush is not running for re-election," he said. "We'll let history take care of evaluating the Bush presidency."

But Blust said it doesn't matter that Bush won't be president past January.

"That's a question I get a lot," she said. "Essentially what we're trying to do is cement his legacy while he's still in office."

Anti-Bush bus rolls into Farmington; Republicans say stop the whining

FARMINGTON — Few topics are more polarizing than politics.

That's why emotions are expected to run wild today when the National Bush Legacy Bus Tour comes to Farmington.

The 45-foot, 28-ton museum on wheels will park at the Gateway Museum for two hours beginning at 11 a.m. today while people tour interactive exhibits that organizers claim demonstrate "eight years of failed Bush/conservative policies."

Sponsored by the nonprofit, nonpartisan group Americans United for Change, the bus is not part of an anti-Bush or anti-conservative movement, spokeswoman Lauren Weiner said.

"The exhibits are designed to make people think," she said. "We're just trying to educate Americans on what the Bush legacy has meant for the country and what his conservative allies in Congress have done."

Organizers of the tour, which began June 24 in Washington, D.C., and will continue through election day, plan to stop in 150 cities, traveling 50,000 miles and reaching 100,000 voters.

The tour is funded through donations from labor organizations, veterans groups and private individuals, Weiner said.

The bus is full of interactive exhibits that allow patrons to calculate the increase in fuel costs since Bush took office, watch videos about the "mismanaged" Iraq War and "epic failure of leadership" in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, and learn more about health care and economic policies.

"A lot of people have visited the bus who are familiar with the (issues)," Weiner said. "There's a lot of reflection going on when people walk through the bus. They might have realized how some policies work, but when you put everything together in one place, it makes people stop and do a double-take. We're showing numbers and facts that don't shine a positive light on the administration, but that's how it was."

Rod Montoya, chairman of the San Juan County Republican party, said the museum exhibits contain some obvious flaws.

"Unfortunately, the obvious always seems to be missed," he said. "We have not been attacked since Sept. 11 on our homeland. The purpose of the military is to protect us, and they've done exactly that. I'd rather be fighting overseas than on our streets."

On Hurricane Katrina, Montoya said the local government failed long before it called for reinforcements from the Bush administration.

"People who want to blame Bush miss the fact that local government completely failed the residents in New Orleans," he said. "The people lived in a town that is below sea level, then a hurricane hits. It's hard to blame the federal government for that."

Montoya further contended that Bush could only sign legislation presented to him by Congress.

"People seem to forget that the president signs legislation, he doesn't create legislation," he said.

Despite its theme, the bus has attracted conservative voters, including those who support Bush, Weiner said.

"We haven't had any protests or vandals yet," she said. "We're more than happy to take the skeptics and walk them through the exhibits."

Montoya said the local Republican Party likely won't protest or visit the bus.

"For the most part, the Democrats and the liberals are the ones who cry," he said. "The Republicans are going to go to work every day and leave the whining to the other side."

Because the bus will be parked on private property owned by a public entity, tour organizers sought permission from the city. City Manager Rob Mayes approved the request on the grounds of free speech, he said.

"Obviously we are supportive of free speech," he said. "As long as a group is not causing a safety hazard or blocking a roadway, we're happy to allow those kind of events regardless of political view or ideology."

Anti-Bush bus tour makes stop in Utah (KSL TV)

August 19, 2008

<http://www.ksl.com/index.php?nid=481&sid=4054632>

A national bus tour criticizing the Bush presidency made a stop in Utah today. The museum on wheels takes direct aim at the policies and decisions of George Bush and his administration.

"Disastrous" is what the people behind the bus tour call the Bush legacy. The president is more popular here than in most states, but a stop here in Salt Lake drew plenty of folks who agree with the sentiment behind the tour.

In an election year, it's the perfect vehicle for public discontent. An unpopular president, another tight election, and a group, this time progressives with Americans United for Change, trumpeting what they see as a list of failures from the party in charge.

Las Vegas resident Stacey Gray said, "I think it's a great way to put the message across that Bush isn't as great as people think he was."

President Bush is still very popular in Utah with a 55 percent approval rating, that's higher than any other state. But this isn't all about him. The $700,000 tour visiting 150 cities hopes to link Bush to McCain to help Obama.

Today it's mostly an exercise in preaching to the converted. Those visiting the bus we spoke with already had strong negative views about Bush's handling of the war, the economy and Katrina.

Bountiful resident Bill Ernest said, "It's seven years too late ... I wish the people of Utah would have realized what was going on seven years ago, maybe it would be different today."

Salt Lake City resident Jimmy Valdez said, "This war was unnecessary. The loss of lives was unnecessary. I mean, it was just stupid. Bush should have never gone in the first place. It was because of oil, more or less, you know. But of course they don't want to admit that, you know."

The president's fans would undoubtedly see this as pure Bush-bashing, but tour organizers say there's more than enough blame to go around.

Julie Blust, the press secretary of the Bush Legacy Tour, said, "We want to make sure we look at the conservative policies that Bush has supported, that his allies in Congress have supported, and where they've gotten us. And this bus is the exemplification of where it's gotten us."

Sen. Orrin Hatch released this statement: "I always do what I believe is right and in the best interest of our state and country. My positions generally reflect the opinions of Utahns, and President Bush won Utah by huge majorities in 2000 and 2004."

We left messages with the White House, the state Republican party and Sen. Bennett, but our calls were not returned this afternoon.

CHEYENNE -- Most of the men, women and children -- carrying bags of peaches and potatoes and pulling wagons -- walked past the 45-foot long blue partisan spectacle bearing the president's face with nary a glance.

The Bush Legacy Bus was parked on 15th Street, just east of the former Union Pacific depot. With the Cheyenne Farmer's Market going on, foot traffic would be heavy here.

Julie Blust, a pert 29-year-old staffer from Cincinnati, said the museum on wheels was issue-focused, not personality-focused.

It was about Bush's policies, not his gaffes at the podium or personal life.

The non-profit behind the tour, Americans United for Change, has sponsors such as MoveOn.org, Health Care for America, and AFL-CIO.

Whatever the political leanings of Cheyenne Farmer's Market shoppers, it was a conversation starter.

Some seemed irritated and alienated by the liberal bias. "It's disrespectful," said a woman to a boy as she looked at the bus. "That's why I don't belong to that party anymore."

Two grandmotherly women with plastic shopping bags in hand paused and tilted their heads upward to read it.

"Why bother going in?" said one to the other. "It's just going to bash Bush."

Others indicated that they felt they just wouldn't learn anything they didn't already know.

A mother pushing a stroller was saying something about gas prices.

"It's ridiculous," she said to her companion, without slowing her pace.

The bus set off something just plain gleeful in Bunny Millan of Connecticut -- in Cheyenne to visit her son.

Laughing and excited, she directed her husband, Tito, to take a family photograph with Bush's giant face as a backdrop.

They also snapped photos of a poster with Sen. John McCain giving Bush a hug, captioned with "McBush."

Tito has an old friend in Texas. The two are aligned on opposite sides of the political spectrum, and they like to give each other a hard time. Tito says it's time for change; the Texan is still a staunch Bush supporter.

The Texan is about to turn 75, Tito said, "and I'm really going to let him have it."

Inside, the exhibit had these topics and messages:

- Education -- Bush's proposed Head Start budget would cut 14,000 slots
- The economy -- productivity is up by 20 percent, but wages are flat
- Pollution -- one in three national parks has increased pollution levels that exceed EPA health standards
- Gas prices n In 2000, it cost $13.70 to fill a tank of gas, in 2008, it cost $40.70
- Hurricane Katrina -- 120,000 people still displaced, New Orleans' Ninth Ward is still in runs
- The war in Iraq -- Bush's "shifting" rationales for the attack were all disproved

Three pre-teen boys took a break from selling newspaper subscriptions at the farmer's market to check out the museum.

They were watching a slide show of the damage caused by the flooding of Hurricane Katrina, which was accompanied by slow, melancholy piano music. The music paused for Bush's disastrous sound bite: "Brownie, you're doing a heckuva job."

"So is this telling us that Bush is the bad guy here," asked Christian Robinson, age 13.

"They should have pictures of Iowa," said Chris Shay to her husband, Mike, referring to that state's flooding of the Mississippi earlier this year. "I bet they have it all fixed up by now."

"It's sad seeing it all at once," she said of the museum. "It makes me want to cry."

The health-care display hit a sore spot with one woman.

"That's right," she said, walking away, throwing up her arms. "Everyone's got access to health care. Just go to the ER!"

She was referring to Bush's quote displayed on the wall.

She told Blust she had racked up $68,000 in medical bills over the past two years because the emergency room was her only option.

Cheyenne is the bus' last stop before the big excitement.

Today, it drives to Denver for the Democratic National Convention. From there, it's St. Paul, Minn., for the Republican National Convention.

A STOP AT COLEMAN'S DOOR (Star Tribune)

The Bush Legacy Tour made a stop Monday night in Sen. Norm Coleman's St. Paul neighborhood. But it's unlikely the senator was cheering.

Inside the motor coach are panels on the Bush administration's handling of Iraq, Hurricane Katrina, the economy, education, health care and labor. The conclusion: the president has been pretty much a failure.

But the larger statement, said spokeswoman Julie Blust, "is about the conservative ideology that he has governed with." The tour is sponsored by Americans United for Change, a progressive nonprofit organization. It will be at Harriet Island Regional Park today, Blust said.

Patrick Wilson of St. Joseph heads to the entrance of the Bush Legacy Tour bus in Downtown St. Joseph Wednesday afternoon. The 45-foot-long bus is a museum that is being led by Americans United for Change.

Sandy Vandever took in the exhibits but left the partisanship to others. This rolling museum came stocked with an ample supply of politics.

Though the St. Joseph woman knew many of the facts on the wall, and even the floor, of the Bush Legacy Tour bus, she left impressed Wednesday after seeing them compiled in such tight quarters.

"I just wanted to see it," she said. "It's part of our history."

The "Bush Legacy" name, printed on the side of the 45-foot bus with a picture of the current president, had an intent confusing to some. It does not promote a future museum.

In fact, the legacy at issue proves one of a mishandled war, a sinking economy and record gas prices, said Americans United for Change, a Washington-based group sponsoring the national tour.

The bus also took aim at 6th District Congressman Sam Graves, who the sponsors said voted for Mr. Bush's programs 77 percent of the time during the Tarkio Republican's legislative tenure.

“It’s not just about (Mr. Bush’s) legacy but also who helped him along the way,” said Julie Blust, the tour’s press secretary. “He wasn’t able to do it on his own. He had their help.”

The bus parked near the corner of Eighth and Edmond streets, outside the St. Joseph building where Mr. Graves has a district office.

Ms. Blust said the bus has visited 42 states since beginning its tour on June 24. While the bus has made stops in districts represented by Democrats in the U.S. House, she could name no Democrats targeted by the tour.

The inside of the bus contained a timeline underfoot and walls filled with data about the Bush administration’s handling of the environment, education, health care and Hurricane Katrina.

Among the exhibits was a gas pump with a computer in its midsection, for tallying the difference in fuel prices from 2000 to present, and a glass bulb on top with the words “Bush & Cheney Oil.”

In a touch screen display under a sign reading “Those Who Marched Us to War,” a readout showed the Iraq conflict costing Missouri taxpayers $5.26 billion.

The Graves campaign had no comment about the bus tour, which scheduled a stop in Springfield, Mo., today.

A Buchanan County Republican, Matt Gerstner, dismissed the traveling museum as “a poor gimmick” that distracted voters from real issues.

“People are looking for solutions on how best to move this country forward,” he said.

Arkansas Democrat-Gazette

‘Bush Legacy’ tour bus pleases, offends in LR (Arkansas Democrat-Gazette)

September 13, 2008 Saturday

BY MATTHEW S.L. CATE ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT-GAZETTE

Strolling along the north side of Little Rock's River Market with her family, Christian Noteboom spotted the giant Bush-bashing bus from afar. As a supporter of the president, it got her dander up.

Funded primarily by labor groups, MoveOn.org and other left-leaning organizations, the 45-foot-long tour bus has been trekking across the country this summer to highlight what the groups call “two terms of failed conservative policies.” During its two-hour lunchtime stop in Arkansas, it drew a few dozen visitors. Many, from state Attorney General Dustin McDaniel to Mary Henry of North Little Rock, already were convinced or were involved in the Little Rock-based effort to design the exhibits.

“It’s just speaking to the choir,” said Henry, 58, who is a volunteer for Barack Obama’s presidential campaign in the state.

But as soon as Noteboom, 28, saw the blue, bio-diesel bus, she headed over to watch one of two exterior widescreen TVs showing a video loop criticizing the Bush administration. She stood with her arms crossed and steamed.

“Everybody’s entitled to their opinion. Even if it’s wrong,” Noteboom, a Russellville preschool teacher, said. “We’re better off in Iraq. The economy is not in crisis. We’re better off now than we were eight years ago.” After resisting at first, she went inside the bus to take a peek - even as her mother, Doreen Roberts, worried: “I told my son-in-law to go in there with her and keep her mouth shut.” The crew was packing up, but Noteboom’s three-minute jaunt didn’t slow anybody down.

“What a bunch of crap,” Noteboom said, pointing out that the giant photo of Bush on the side of the bus was “a good picture” of the president. “About the most interesting thing in there was a picture of Abraham Lincoln, bless his heart.” The bus - which primarily focuses on the Bush administration’s handling of the economy, the Iraq war and Hurricane Katrina - began its cross-country mission in late June and is scheduled to appear in more than 100 cities before Election Day.

Its Iraq war feature comes complete with a dead soldier’s boots and family photos, lined up next to a flow chart of “Those Who Marched Us to War ... and Kept Us There.” The chart showed top Bush administration officials and Republican congressional leaders. Not pictured were any of the 110 congressional Democrats who voted to authorize the war.

The Katrina exhibit, which features a timeline of the administration's response and a video montage that includes a photo of Bush playing guitar with a country music singer, particularly touched John Paul Bodiak of Little Rock.

Taking a lunch break with four colleagues from the JM Associates production firm, the 29-year-old said the bus offered a good reminder of what has happened since he first voted for Bush in 2000. It's a vote he now regrets.

“A lot of people maybe kind of have forgotten,” said Bodiak, who backed John Kerry in 2004. “It definitely outlines how much of a blunder it was.” Said his co-worker, Jake Kelso, 26, of North Little Rock: “Nothing I hadn't heard before. But it was very powerful.” That's the reaction Chris Minshall was hoping for. A Little Rock graphic designer, Minshall worked the job with his wife, Maggie, on contract with Little Rock consulting firm The Markham Group to flesh out the concept behind the “Bush Legacy” tour bus.

After choosing the exhibits' photos and typefaces and designing their overall layout, he'd seen the finished product online. But Friday gave him his first chance to see his handiwork firsthand.

“It turned out way better than I thought it would,” he said.

Bush Legacy bus makes stop at Capitol (Nashville City Paper)

The Bush Legacy Bus Tour rolled through Nashville on Tuesday, stopping in front of the state Capitol to deride the president's record and to tie that record to Sen. Lamar Alexander.

The tour, sponsored by Americans United for Change, parked for two hours in front of the Capitol and allowed passersby to walk through a display of what the organization called President George W. Bush's legacy.

Americans United for Change is funded by prominent national labor unions and political action groups like MoveOn.org.

“The idea behind the tour is to look at Bush's legacy while he's still in office,” said the group's press secretary, Julie Blust. “While things are still going on and things are still fresh in people's minds, we want to submit his legacy in the history books right now.”

The bus focuses on issues like the war in Iraq, Bush's economic record, rising gas prices, the number of Americans without health insurance and the federal government's response in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina three years ago.

“It's good to see all the facts lined up in one place,” said Jamie McClanahan, who walked through the tour bus. “I learned some new facts, like the stuff about his environment record.”

The object of the 42-state tour is also to tie Bush's legacy to members of Congress who have supported him over the years. Blust said Alexander has voted with the president 89 percent of the time.

'Bush Legacy Tour' makes stop in BG (Bowling Green Daily News)

<http://www.bgdailynews.com/articles/2008/09/17/news/news6.txt>

By JUSTIN STORY, The Daily News, jstory@bgdailynews.com

The dark blue charter bus pulled into Fountain Square across from the Capitol Theatre on Tuesday afternoon with a message - President Bush's policies have failed and we'll show you how.

Traveling from state to state as the Bush Legacy Tour, the bus is a concept developed by Americans United for Change and is like a museum on wheels, documenting the administration's policies and its various effects on the country, including rising gas prices, environmental deregulation and the federal government's response to Hurricane Katrina.

The bus has been on the road since June 23, leaving from in front of the White House to embark on a 150-city, 42-state tour that will culminate with a stop in Harrisonburg, Va., on Nov. 3, the day before Election Day.

Bowling Green was the latest scheduled stop on the tour Tuesday after a stint in Nashville.

Americans United for Change was established in 2005 to mount a campaign against efforts to privatize Social Security. Since that successful campaign, the Washington, D.C.-based progressive organization has worked to build public and congressional support for action on other issues.

AUC spokeswoman Julie Blust said the Bush Legacy Tour came about several months ago during brainstorming sessions about what a Bush presidential library would look like if it documented ways in which the administration's policies have adversely affected the country.

The result was a touring bus that features a timeline of administration lowlights on its floor and several interactive displays, including a gas tank that calculates how much more drivers have to pay to fill up their gas tanks now compared to eight years ago and a monitor tracking how much the war in Iraq is costing taxpayers in each state and several selected cities.

The message is tailored to each stop, so in Bowling Green two signs were displayed from behind the windshield connecting the president with the Republican Senate minority leader from Kentucky - "Bush's failed policy is your legacy, too, Mitch McConnell."

Michael Mason, 18, of Bowling Green said the bus caught his eye, leading him to stop and check it out for himself.

"I know everyone is talking about it now, but the gas prices jumped out at me," said Mason, who is studying history at Western Kentucky University and who intends to vote for Sen. Barack Obama. "I forgot that it only cost $15 to fill up eight years ago."

Blust said the bus has attracted the attention of a lot of curious drivers at each stop, but there have not been many outwardly hostile reactions toward the bus during its travels.

"I thought we would have at least one or two people who would try to deface the bus, but generally people who don't agree with us have been very respectful about it," Blust said.
